LABOR DAY.

Noteworthy Observance at Lower Falls.

Under Direction Of Father Callanan of St. John's Church.

A very enthusiastic meeting of the parishioners of St. John's church was held in the parochial residence Newton Lower Falls, Tuesday evening. Fr. Callanan, the pastor, presided, and all details were finally arranged for the great annual Labor day carnival. Committee reports were presented and the 400 members of the different committees were all confident of the grand success of their efforts.

The following were elected to preside at the refreshment booths: District 1, Mrs. Bernard Early, Mrs.

This game will begin promptly at 2:15. Mr. John O'Donohue of Wellesley was elected referee of the contest.

A second football contest between Newton and Waltham is being arranged. The following were elected a football committee: Thomas Anderson, Patrick Mullen, Thomas Rourke.

This annual picnic is unique in this, that Fr. Callanan does not charge any admission to the grounds, and whole families can enjoy a day for little or nothing. Thousands patronize the carnival from all quarters every year, as electric cars from Boston and all points go direct to the beautiful grounds of St. John's church at Newton Lower Falls, where the picnic is to be held. The carnival of sports begins at 10 and continues all day.

THE PLAYHOUSE.

Majestic Theatre—William A. Brady, who has won the commendation of Bostonians by his adequate productions of "Way Down East," "Foxy Grandpa," and other successes, stands sponsor for Joseph Hart's musical drolery, "Girls Will Hub Theatre—As the season advances, Stair and Wilbur's Hub Theatre, at the corner of Washington and Dover streets, seems to grow in the favor of the theatre-going public, and in the three weeks that the house has been opened under this firm's management, it has attained a steady patronage that has been equalled by no other theatre in the city. A series of ladies' coupon matinees on Monday afternoons has been inaugurated at the Hub, and in the advertisements of that theatre, in Boston Sunday papers will be found a coupon, which ladies are invited to cut out and present at the box office of the theatre, and by the payment of a slight difference in price will obtain an orchestra seat. The attraction announced for next week at the Hub, will be the pastoral comedy drama, "The Minister's Daughter," a powerful play of human heart interest, written by Leonard Grover, and presented under his personal direction.

Globe Theatre—The Globe Theatre on Washington street, near Beach, Boston, will be formally opened on the night of Monday Sept. 14, by Mr. James K. Hackett and his company presenting the Romantic play, "John Ermine of the Yellowstone." This is a play by James Evan Ship-

"THE BATHING GIRL—A SCENE IN THE PRINCE OF PILSEN AT THE TREMONT THEATRE."

J. Kenney, Mrs. Annie McLaughlin, Miss Villa Coulter, Miss Sarah Ryan, district 8, Miss Maggie Shea, Miss Bridget Griffen, Miss Catherine Gallagher, Miss Mary Callahan, district 9, Mrs. Edward Butler, Miss Mary Crotty, Mrs. Dennis Doyle, Mr. John A. Donovan, fancy and sale table, Miss Julia Doolan, Miss Alice Devine; tonic and cigar booth, Michael Bogley, Frank Curry, Charles Farnham, P. T. Cunningham; candy table, Miss Annie Warren, Miss Katie Purcell, Miss Alice Costello, Miss Mary Gleason, Miss Minnie Cunningham; committee on dancing, John H. Sheridan, Patrick O'Neill, Owen McCourt, James A. Early, Bernard Early, James Monaghan, Alexander McDonald, Harry Vyett, William Kenney, Fred Early, William Gleason, Frank Donlan, Harry Cahill, Daniel Fogarty, William Manning, Fred Coleman; floor director, Edward Madden; committee on tickets, Miss Annie Costello, Miss Fannie Dunn, Miss Martha McAllister, Miss Cora Hyde, Miss Margaret Corcoran; committee on tug-of-war contests, Patrick Hagerty, Thomas Hagerty, Michael Sullivan, Thomas Kilmain, Job Monaghan.

Special committees were appointed on African dodger, shooting gallery, cane board, tippecanoe, aunt Sally, striking machine, Indian javelin, archery, ring quoits, magic rings, plectich, decorations and music. The athletic sports decided on were as follows: 100-yards dash, 40-yards dash, 220-yards dash, 135-yards dash, running high jump, running broad jump, running hop, skip and jump, putting 56-pound weight, putting 16-pound shot, sack race, three-legged race, shoe race, potato race and pole vault.

For the girls the following events were scheduled: 40-yards dash, hoop race, jump rope race and egg race. Committee on sports were William Chesterman, John Flemming, Thomas Hyde, Jos. Pendergast, John Ryan, Jas. Cain. Several entries were received for the great tug-of-war contests. For these feats of strength 10 men on a side were decided on. Nine entries were also received of five-men teams. About 15 mighty contests will take place in this event. Fr. Callanan has been the pioneer in this feature of athletic sports. Some of the best teams in the state are entered. Two local teams, one a parish team and one from division 25, A. O. H., are practicing hard to pull off the prize. Two baseball games will take place during the day, the first beginning promptly at 12:30 and the second at 3 p. m.

One of the features that is attracting widespread interest is the great Gaelic football game between the Natick Rovers and the Garryowens of Newton Lower Falls. At a special meeting last night the committee on football reported that hundreds of lovers of the great Irish game will attend from all parts of Greater Boston.

Be Girls," which opens with a Labor Day Matinee at this theatre. "Girls Will Be Girls" has for its locale the interior and exterior of a seminary near Boston, and the fifty or more pretty young women who take part in it are said to be charmingly simple and simply charming in dainty gowns of orandy and other girly dresses. The musical numbers which Mr. Hart has composed include many whistle tunes, among them a Japanese lullaby, "Moy O San," which is sung with unique electric effects. Mr. Brady's company is headed by Al. Leech and the Three Rosebuds a quartet well known here, and including Felix Hanev the original Hi Holler of "Way Down East." There are fifty-six other people a few of whom will not be girls. Matinees beside the opening one on Labor Day September 7, will occur Wednesdays and Saturdays.

Boston Music Hall—Probably few people know that Wilson Barrett's sublime religious drama "The Sign of the Cross," which is now being magnificently presented at the Boston Music Hall, and which enters the second and last week of its engagement next Monday, owes its origin to a chance acquaintance and conversation had between the famous actor and author Mr. Wilson Barrett and that brilliant orator and noted atheist Colonel Robert Ingersoll. It seems strange that the most violent atheist of the past century should have indirectly influenced Mr. Barrett to write a play teaching the power and beauty of the Christian faith yet such was the case.

Keith's Theatre—Robert Hilliard will be the star attraction at Keith's next week, appearing in a new and original sketch that is said to be quite melodramatic in character. Mr. Hilliard is to play the part of a burglar, and a little girl figures in it also. The star will be supported by Edward Holland, who is also a capital actor. Among the other entertainers scheduled for the week commencing Sept. 7, are the following: Holloway Trio, the greatest wire performers in the varieties; Grace LaRue, a strenuous singer of "coon" ballads, assisted by pickaninnies; Hal Merritt, monologue and mimetic comedian; Treloar, an ex-Harvard basketball and athlete, in an exhibition similar to Sandow's assisted by Mlle. Tempest; Emma Carus, vocal comedienne, lately with "The Defender"; Brothers DeVan, novelty acrobats, introducing the only canine acrobat in the world, and Wallino and Marietta, the original Vienna caricature dancers, making their first appearance in this country, Monday (Labor Day) the doors will be opened at 10 o'clock a. m.

Grand Opera House—Once again David Belasco's most effective and popular dramatic play, "The Heart of Maryland," is announced for a week's engagement commencing Monday (Labor Day) matinee at the Grand Opera House. A visit of this brilliantly effective play of love and war is invariably an assurance to the management of the presence of a numerous and gratified audience. It is the impressive realism of the war episodes, the romanticism and intense heart interest of its love element and its picturesque scenic environment allied with and enhanced by the dominant individuality of its characters. It is a drama in which the artificial is transformed, to the spectator's mind, by the pen of the playwright, for a time into a living, breathing actuality of picturesque scenes, absorbingly stirring events and strongly drawn particulars of American character.

man, founded on Frederic Remington's Novel of the same name.

NORUMBEGA PARK

Patrons of vanderbilt at Norumbega Park the coming week will be excellently entertained by the list of talent provided for a holiday attraction and to be presented every afternoon and evening the coming week. A leading feature will be the moving pictures. A novel feature on the list will be the Tyrolean Yodlers, whose vocal selections are rendered to the accompaniment of native Alpine instruments. Another team will be Carr and Burns, comedians and vocalists, with a merry act that excels others of the same kind. Louder and Stanley will present their refined little comedy playlet and a comedy acrobatic act will be given by Mullin and Correll, full of novel features. Band concerts will be given in Music Court on Labor Day by the Waltham Watch Company band as a special holiday attraction.

Mayor Weeks' Views.

Mayor Weeks fully endorses the present method of selecting state commissioners by gubernatorial appointment as his letter to the editor of the Suburban will indicate. The letter is as follows:

I have yours of Aug. 14 asking for an expression of opinion from me regarding the method of choosing the members of the metropolitan commissions, referring particularly to the park commission and to the water and sewerage commission.

I have no hesitancy in saying that I consider the present method much preferable to the election of a commission by the people of the metropolitan district. The members of the present commissions are men of the highest character and competent to fill the positions. Heretofore Massachusetts' governors could be, almost without exception depended upon to appoint suitable men for such positions and any change would in my opinion be a step backward. I believe that if commissioners to fill such positions were elected, that many men of inferior quality would creep into positions where the highest responsibility and capacity are necessary to properly expend the large amounts of money which the state has been and is appropriating for metropolitan purposes.

I write this without any regard to the effect which metropolitan appropriations have on Newton, which has been anything but satisfactory. Newton does not use metropolitan water, notwithstanding which it is paying this year an assessment of $9252.87, and I have no doubt that if the money which Newton has paid in the last five years for metropolitan park purposes had been spent direct within the city along the shores of the Charles river, that an equal amount of development would have been the result, although a similar tax to that of this year, which is $32,374, may be expected for a great many years to come.

Therefore, while I believe Newton is to a large extent the sufferer by the method of assessments and certainly heretofore by the application of the money spent I do not think that this is chargeable to the method of selecting commissioners and quite likely not to the commissioners themselves.

Yours very truly,
JOHN W. WEEKS,
Mayor of the City of Newton, Mass.

REAL ESTATE

John T. Burns has sold or rented the following houses:

Sold for Frank Wilbur one-half interest in Wilbur restaurant to Mr. Wood, of Florida.

Leased, Duncklee house 30 Pearl street to Mr. Whitmore of Newton Highlands.

Mrs. Ford, house Tremont street to Mr. Porter of Watertown.

Chief Tarbox house West Newton, to Dr. Watkins Newtonville.

Mr. Juddkins house Maple avenue, to Mr. A. Thomas of Newton.

House 29 Fayette street to Mr. Joyce.

Lafie house Carleton street to Mr. McDonald of Newton.

Miss Gavin house Capitol street, to Mrs. Todd of Watertown.

Mr. Larkins house on Jewett street, to Mr. Coleman of Cambridge.

Mr. Vokey's house Capitol street to Mr. Ross of Maine.

Dr. Mead house on Rockland street, to Mr. Sweeney of Newton.

We rejoice that a petition has been started in Auburndale indorsing the action of the Metropolitan Park commission in arresting offenders of good morals on the Charles river. The indecent conduct has been a nuisance and grievance for some years past, and patience and toleration have ceased to be a virtue, on the part of those who visit the river for innocent pleasure. Auburndale especially feels this. Norumbega Park draws great crowds and unless there is special care and surveillance by the police, this beautiful suburb will be a byword and reproach and associated with that which is contemptible and vile.

We trust that the public sentiment of this community already controls the regulations of this park, that there may be no objectionable features connected with it upon its rustic stage, or elsewhere.

We hope a petition commending the park commissioners for the action they have taken will be started in other parts of Newton.

Mr. Prescott C. Bridgman of New-

Mr. Bridgman had just taken his born in Buckfield, Me., Jan. 31, 1824, the son of George and Anna (Nickelis) Bridgman.

He was educated in the public schools of his native town and at the

Mr. Bridgman was a member of the common council in 1880, 1881 and 1882, and had also been a director and trustee in the West Newton National tonville avenue since April, 1883.

Police Paragraphs.

Reserve Officer A. H. Adams Jr.,

resigned Wednesday night on account of illness.

Michael Crnice, a laborer belonging in Framingham, while riding out from Boston on a Commonwealth avenue electric, Saturday night, refused to pay his fare. When a fellow passenger handed up a nickel to prevent

Michael being ejected, the latter took offense and struck the man a blow in the face. Michael was then arrested.

In court Monday morning he was fined $15.

George Poland, an Armenian, and a laborer of Polish nationality several days ago got into a quarrel in a Newton Upper Falls iron foundry, where both were employed. Peculiar as it may seem, neither understands the language of the other. However, from words they fell to blows and the Pole was finally knocked senseless by Poland, who struck him with a bar of iron. He was arraigned in court

Monday morning on a charge of assault and fined $20.

Board of Aldermen.

A special meeting of the board of aldermen was held last Monday evening upon call of the mayor to draw

Court at East Cambridge.

The mayor presided and these aldermen were present: Baker, Carter,

Chesley, F. A. Day, Dennison, Ellis,

Ensign, Hubbard, Hunt, Johnson,

Lothrop, Mellen, Norris, and Sweeney.

Alderman Johnson was designated by the mayor to draw the names and

Albert B. Allison, Mason W. Morse

and Levi W. Scott were chosen.

The board at 7:55 o'clock adjourned.

Business Locals.

Colligan & Tombs the West Newton Tailors, have moved their place of business from Robinson's block to 1285 Washington street, Cor. Waltham street.

Letter to F. D. Tarlton, West Newton.

Dear Sir: It is all very well for you to say that it takes fewer gallons of Devco Lead and Zinc to paint a house than it does of mixed paints; but you want to know why.

For the same reason that it takes less good cow's milk to feed a baby than it does of skimmed milk.

Most mixed paints are fifteen to eighty per cent. adulteration—inconceivable, but true. Water isn't paint. Barytes isn't paint. Whiting isn't paint. Benzine isn't paint. Petroleum isn't paint. Fish-oil isn't paint. None of these are a right part of a good paint. None of these do the work that belongs to paint.

All they do is to fill the can. Devco Lead and Zinc is one hundred per cent. paint. The adulterated mixed paints are only twenty to eighty-five per cent. paint.

Mixed paint ought to be from fifteen to eighty per cent. cheaper than Devco Lead and Zinc—no; the worst of them oughtn't to be anything. They waste your money; you not only must pay the painter for spreading the extra number of gallons; and painting costs three times as much as the paint.

Yours truly,

CHAPTER XIX.

THE captain, not ill pleased at this and other manifestations of hearty spirit which had met him on every hand, mounted the ladders and resumed his station on the high poop deck of the frigate.

Anything less like a war vessel could hardly be imagined. The Bon Homme Richard had been an old fashioned, high pooped East Indian man-of-war with a towering foremast. This antiquated mackintosh, formerly called the Duc de Duras, had been turned over to Jones for a ship of war through the grudging kindness of France. It was the best ship Franklin and the other commissioners of the new American republic could procure for their greatest sea captain. Jones, out of compliment to Franklin, author of the "Poor Richard" papers, had renamed her. The name was the only thing new about her. She had been pierced for thirty-six guns, twenty-eight 12 pounders on the main deck and eight 9 pounders on the quarter deck and fore-castle. In utter desperation at her entire inadequacy, Jones had recourse to the dangerous experiment, not often resorted to, of mounting six 18 pounders in ports pierced for them on the berth deck, and of course very near the water line. The guns were all of an obsolete pattern and much worn by use, the 18 pounders being especially bad; as dangerous, in fact, to friends as foes. Bad as they were, they were all he could obtain, and, with characteristic determination, Jones resolved to make the best of them.

The ship herself was so old and rotten that she was not even fit for an ordinary merchant cruise, much less prepared for the shocks of battle. Through an unfortunate combination of circumstances, all of her senior officers were absent except Dale, the first lieutenant, Stacey, the sailing master, and Mease, the purser. Among that half of her crew who were soldiers many had scarcely yet acquired their "sea legs," and some of them were actually seasick during the battle! The Serapis, with which they were about to engage and to which they were rapidly drawing near, was a brand new, double banked frigate, mounting fifty guns on one uncovered and two covered decks, twenty 18 pounders, twenty 9's and ten 6's. She was manned by 350 well drilled able seamen and commanded by one of the best officers in the English navy, who was ably seconded by a full quota of capable and experienced subordinates.

Pearson had no more doubt of winning the victory than he had of the rising of the sun next morning. Leaving one factor out of a comparison of the opposing forces, his confidence was absolutely warranted. But Jones had no more doubt of winning the victory than Pearson had. Pearson knew his ship and his crew; Jones knew himself. He was the unconscious factor which vitiated Pearson's conclusions. When a man like the little Scotch-American captain makes up his mind to do a thing there is only one thing to prevent his doing it, and that is to remove the man! Jones intended to conquer. There never was a man who had more of the spirit of absolute determination, of unconquerable, unshakable, unbreakable pertinacity in continuing a conflict, than he. He never knew when he was beaten, perhaps because he never was. There was something in the sheer determination, persistent pugnacity of the man which absolutely compelled success. He wrenched victory from overwhelming odds, superior force, fortuitous chance—everything.

The men understood this too. There is nothing that your real hard bitten daredevil, your imprudent ruffian, likes so much as a man who is not afraid of him and who will be his master. Your ruffian curses and swears at your man, plots against him, rebels, mutinies, conspires, and in the moment of action follows him like a devotee. The little man standing at the break of the poop, cool, calm, thoughtful, with his student face and somewhat poetic, dreamy smile, did not look like the iron handed, iron willed, indomitable master of the motley ruffian band which had been dumped upon his deck—which he certainly was. With the dainty manner of a Frenchman, the courteous deference of a gentleman of the oldest and best school, the calmness of an ancient philosopher, there was in his appearance no outward evidence of the tremendous qualities inherent in the man save in the sparkling, flashing, piercing eye, which plunged through and through those upon whom its glances were fastened with the keenness of a sword blade.

His men were wont to say that he could look even a frigate into striking her colors if given an opportunity. The hardest ruffian cringed like a cur before him, and this when he was peaceful and quiet. When he grew angry, which was rare, his passion was like Washington's, blasting and appalling. He was perfectly quiet now, however, and he stood by Dale's side at the break of the poop looking over the bows of the ship toward the enemy.

As she swept forward through the peaceful sea a fragrance of halm and spicery and myrrh, which seemed to suggest the many voyages of the old ship in the distant tropic latitudes, clung about the decks and pervaded the gentle air already redolent with the sweet scent of new mown hay from the not distant shore. It was as calm and sweet an autumn night as ever falls across the tired earth. The land breeze blew softly across the decks. The bright radiance of the glorious moon of harvest sparkled and wavered and flickered with sinuous, restless brilliancy on the tossing water ahead. All the busy notes of preparation had died away. There had come over the hearts of all in that moment before the approaching crisis a little silence which bespoke a recognition of the gravity of the impending conflict. The mellow toned bell forward was striking the time—two, four, six, seven bells in the second dog watch, half after 7 o'clock. The minutes were being rung away for some of the men upon the decks of the great old ship; for many of them the bell would strike no more. Some who had gazed carelessly upon the setting sun would not see it rise again. Laughter ceased, jest failed, and some unwonted lips, while eyes were heavenward turned, murmured the name of God in belated petition. Even the most hardened and indifferent sailor felt the influence of the hour and was still.

Off on the starboard bow the Pallas was gallantly speeding toward her distant foe. The Alliance, having paid no attention to repeated signals, was still edging in toward the convoy. The Serapis, with her topsail to the mast, her men at quarters, ports open, lanterns lighted, was grimly waiting. As Jones' eye fell upon the Alliance his lips were tightened. A black shadow swept across his face which boded ill for Landais again. When Dale, standing by his side, ventured to break his reverie by a bitter comment upon the defection of the frigate, Jones remarked:

"Never mind, sir. The fewer we are the more honor we shall gain by taking them."

But in the main the two officers kept silent watch together. Even the chattering Frenchmen caught the contagion of the portentous moments and stood in quiet ranks prepared and ready. It was no quarrel of theirs, this in which they fought, but their old and ever present hatred of England gave them inspiration enough for the conflict. The breeze freshened slightly, and as the Richard drew nearer the Serapis the latter swung her ponderous mainyard and slowly filled away. The two ships were sailing at right angles to each other, the Richard slightly ahead of the Serapis, which was moving to cross her bow.

"Shall I go to the batteries now, captain?" asked the first lieutenant.

"Yes, I think you would better," answered Jones, stretching out his hand.

"Goodby, sir," said the other, grasping it firmly.

"Goodby. God bless you, Richard," said the older man, looking gravely at his beloved subordinate.

"And you, sir," returned Dale, with an unusual accent of tender affection. Then he turned and ran rapidly to his station.

"Pass the word quickly," said Jones to young Brooks, "for the men to deliver their fire promptly and together when the word is given. Not a gun is to be discharged until the order. After that, as rapidly as possible."

As the fleet footed midshipman ran along the decks a little murmur of excitement arose. There was a shifting of positions. Men sprang to their stations. Hoarse whispers came from the gun captains as the smoldering matches or glowing loggerheads were handed to them by their subordinates.

"Silence fore and aft the decks!" came the clear voice of the captain.

The murmurs died away as young Brooks sprang up the ladder and reported that everything was ready. The boy officers choked down something that rose in their throats as they walked nervously up and down their divisions. A fleeting thought they gave to home, mother, hours of play, so far away. It was the first battle for many of them. Down on the berth deck in front of the hatchway little Payne looked to the priming of his pistols and whispered a word or two to his men, who stood with their muskets pointing down through the gratings covering the hatchway. He wished he had been up on deck with the rest, fighting a great gun or attached to the side of the captain, but the captain had told him that the post of honor and importance was here, and here he would stand. There, on the starboard side, his young messmate and friend, McCollin, gave another careful inspection to his three old 18 pounders, firmly resolved to give such an account with them, if they did not burst, as would decide the action.

Cuswell and Mayrant were in the fore-castle to fight the two guns there. Mr. Mease, the purser, as brave a man as ever stepped a deck, though no sailor, had charge of the quarter deck guns. Stacey, the sailing master, stood aft by the wheel to assist in working the ship. Brooks and De Chamillard were on the poop near

Jones. Fanning, with his bullets in the maintop, was anxiously wishing that he, too, might have a place in the center of the conflict, the gun deck, little knowing what decisive moment was in store for him.

They were nearer now, well within gun shot, yet there was no sound from either ship. The tense expectancy of the moment was becoming unbearable to the younger hands. What were the captains of the ships about? Why didn't they fire? Away off on the horizon flashes of light and the deep boom of artillery reverberating across the water told that their consort had joined in battle with the Scarborough. Why were they so slow? Suddenly, in the midst of the silence, broken only by the soft sigh of the summer wind through the top lumper, the splashing of the bluff bows as they forced themselves through the rippling water, came the sound of a hail from the English ship, the words of which were indistinguishable.

"I don't understand you," cried Jones, then he turned to the quarter-master and said softly:

"Over with the helm! Hard a-star-board!" As the wheel was put over by the skillful hands of the quarter-master and his mate the great ship swung slowly to port and rounded to off the port bow of the English ship.

The Englishman hailed again.

"This is the United States ship Bon Homme Richard," shouted Paul Jones in reply, at the top of his voice, springing up on the rail the while. "Stand by!" A quiver and shiver went through the ship from her tops to her very vitals. "Fire!"

Streams of light leaped out in the darkness. Clouds of smoke rose at once from the sides of the Richard, only to be met and brushed away by a broadside which had been delivered no less promptly from the English ship. Groans and curses and yells and cheers rose from the blood stained decks upon which men writhed in the agony of ghastly wounds or lay contorted in hideous death where they had fallen, for at close range both broadsides had done fearful execution.

The desperate men ran the huge guns in and out and loaded them with frantic energy and kept up a continuous cannonade upon their foes. The roar of the great guns drowned every other sound as the two ships sailed side by side in bitter conflict, but the trained ear of the American captain had detected another sound coincident with the first broadside which told a tale of disaster. When the logger-heads had been applied to the priming of two of the 18 pounders they had exploded with terrific concussion, killing and wounding nearly every man of their crews.

McCollin, who commanded the battery, was struck by a piece of iron and received a dreadful wound. He remained at his post, however, clinging tenaciously to a broken stanchion for a moment until he recovered himself a little. As the frightened and appalled men shrank away from the remaining gun of the battery, not yet discharged in view of the dreadful explosion, he seized the hot iron from the dead hand of the captain of No. 1 gun, and setting his lips grimly staggered over to the last cannon.

"Don't do it, sir!" hoarsely cried the old boatswain's mate who served under him. "It'll blow up with ye, as the others ha' done!" There was no reply. McCollin was beyond words. With set lips and grim face, in silence he wavered on before the awestruck men. With tottering steps he reached the gun and applied the iron. There was a blinding roar and the gun whirled inboard in rapid recoil from the force of the discharge.

"Load it again," said the gasping boy, striving to stop the blood with his hand against his side. Before the men who, inspired by such heroism, had sprung eagerly forward, could reach the piece, an 18 pound shot from the Serapis' lower deck struck it fair and square on the trunnion and dismounted it. That battery was useless.

The explosion had made a gaping hole in the side of the Richard, through which the red lighted side of the Serapis but a short distance away could be seen plainly. The deck above and below was badly shattered by the blowing up of the guns.

"All the men alive of this division," said McCollin thickly, "will find places at the divisions on the gun deck. We can do nothing more here. Goodby, I say."

A few moments later a powder blackened, blood stained, white faced, desperate little figure appeared out of the smoke before the captain.

"McCollin, you here!" he cried sternly. "Why are you not with your battery, sir?"

"I have to report, sir," said the boy, grasping the rail with one hand to keep from falling while he saluted with the other, "that two of the berth deck guns blew up, sir, and the other was dismounted. Have you any orders for me, sir?"

"Too bad!" cried Jones. "Orders—but you are wounded!"

At this moment a round shot struck the lad fair in the chest. With his hand still at salute he was whirled across the deck and thrown against the taffrail, a broken mass of what had been humanity.

"Good heaven!" exclaimed the captain, starting and almost losing his iron nerve at this double shock—the loss of the battery and the death of the midshipman. "Poor lad! A hero!"

The ships were nearer now. The rattle of the Frenchmen were cracking and the fire from the great guns was continuous. The Richard had drawn well ahead, and fearful that the Serapis would cross his stern and rake, Jones now shivered his headstalls, threw his afterstalls aback, checked the way of his own ship, and the Serapis, firing madly into the smoke, drew ahead of the Richard. Jones then put his helm up to try to cross her stern and rake. The quick handling of the English ship frustrated this plan. The bow of the Richard struck the port quarter of the Serapis. The two ships hung together a moment, boarders were called on both sides, but before they could be used the two ships drifted apart and formed a line ahead, with not a single gun bearing on either ship. The roar of the guns gradually subsided, and even the crack of the small arms died away. The smoke drifted slowly off to leeward.

"Why are you not with your battery, sir?"

CHAPTER XX.

THE battle had been maintained with the utmost fury for nearly three-quarters of an hour, and both ships had sustained severe injuries. The Richard being in much the worse condition. The heavy shot from the long 18 pounders of the Serapis had played havoc with her. Pearson naturally thought that it was about time for Jones to surrender, though the hour when Jones thought it time to surrender would never strike. The sudden silence which had fallen upon the conflict was broken by a voice from the British ship. In high interrogation it rang over the waters in the moonlight.

"Have you struck?" was the question of the Serapis. From the shattered Richard came Jones' immortal answer:

"I have not yet begun to fight!"

A roar of wild exultation, a gigantic Homeric laugh, broke from the throats of the crew of the Richard as the reply of the captain was passed from deck to deck until the whole ship from truck to keelson quivered with responsive joy. It was a joke the character of which those blood stained ruffians could well appreciate, but the captain was in no mood for joking. He was serious, and in the simplicity of the answer lay its greatness. Strike! Not now nor ever! Beaten! The fighting is but just begun! The preposterous possibility of surrender cannot even be considered. What manner of man this with whom you battle in the moonlight, brave Pearson? An unfamiliar kind to you and to most, such as has not been before nor shall be again. Yet all the world shall see and understand at this time.

"I have not yet begun to fight!"

Surprising answer! On a ship shattered beyond repair, her best guns exploded and useless, her crew decimated, ringed about with dead and dying, the captain has not yet begun to fight! But there was no delay after the answer, no philosophizing, no heroics. The man of action was there. He meant business! Every moment when the guns were silent was a wasted one.

The helm was shifted to starboard and the headsails shivered. The Richard slowly swung off to port and gathered headway again. The Serapis had lost an opportunity of tacking and raking. In order more quickly to bring his guns to bear and perhaps to prevent a raking by the enemy, Captain Pearson threw all aback. And the two ships, one backing and the other reaching ahead, slowly drew abreast each other, the batteries speaking again as soon as the guns bore. The wind was very light, and the motion of both ships was sluggish in the extreme, so that they practically lay side by side, steering away almost gone, slowly drifting in for long minutes, until there came a sudden, temporary breath of wind.

The position was most advantageous for the Serapis, as with her heavier and more numerous guns she could deliberately knock the Richard into a "cocked hat." She was much the speedier and handier ship, and might reasonably hope to choose her own distance, and, having selected a point of vantage, maintain it to the end. Pearson's game was to fight at long range until he had sunk his enemy. No difficult task that last—she was half sinking now! But what the Richard lacked in mobility and direction, she made up in her captain. Jones did things instinctively. Pearson had to think about them. Jones' only hope was in getting to close quarters and making use of the disciplined French soldiery upon his decks.

They had done good service already in clearing the spar deck of the English. Therefore, as the Richard, gathering way, gradually forged ahead, her helm was shifted to port and the vessel slowly swung across the bow of the Serapis, which had just begun to fill away again as Pearson saw that he had nearly backed out of action. The bow of the Serapis struck the starboard quarter of the Richard, the jib boom thrusting itself violently through the mizzen rigging. There was a terrific crash at the moment of impact, and a second later the Eng-

—Dr. Bothfeld's automobile was ruined by fire in Lynn Monday evening. The doctor was riding on Essex street when he discovered the machine to be in flames. He got to City Hall square, when the gasoline tank exploded. A still alarm was given, and a chemical engine extinguished the blaze. A big crowd collected, and after the fire it was found that one of the rubber tires had been stolen.

—Mrs. Orinda Dudley Hornbrooke read a paper at a recent meeting at Greenacre, Me., on her cousin, Sibyl Jones, the silver voiced preacher and missionary of the Quakers, born in Maine, a descendant of old Gov. Dudley, who was trained in the Friend's school at Providence, of which her nephew is now the principal, but went forth to Liberia, to England, France, Norway and finally to Palestine, as preacher and reformer. She was a contemporary and friend of Whittier, a little older than he, and celebrated by him in one of his poems. She was also an aunt of the eminent instructor and earnest suf-ragist, Mrs. Augustine Jones, and a friend of John Bright, who admired her eloquence and her noble spirit.

School Dedication.

Next Monday afternoon at 3.30 o'clock the Charles C. Burr school on Ash street, Auburndale, will be dedicated.

A notable list of prominent gentlemen will be present, including Governor Bates, Mayor Weeks, President Weed of the aldermen, ex-Mayor Pickard, W. A. Knowlton of the school committee, Supt. of schools Atkinson and Mr. E. B. Haskell. The guests will be seated later at the Woodland Park Hotel by ex-Mayor Pickard.

Mrs. Chas. C. Burr has given the building a portrait of her husband for whom the school is named.

It Dissolves Grease and Dirt.

It is a perfect cleanser of all impurities and a destroyer of all bac-teritic life. It is a concentrated dark colored liquid, a spoonful to a pail of water containing more real cleaning powers than any amount of soap and doing innumerable things soap cannot do. We speak of Cabot's SULPHO-NAPHTHOL, which has raised the standard of household purity to a height unattainable by the ordinary cleaning and so-called disinfecting agents. For full cleaning and as a guard against Smallpox it is the best thing on the market. Get the genuine.

Father Callanan's Picnic.

Father Callanan's picnic at Newton Lower Falls is always a distinguishing feature of Labor Day in this city, and the events of last Monday added new laurels to the brow of that indefatigable clergyman. The customary large crowd estimated at fully 4000 were present and found plenty to interest and entertain.

Refreshments, fancy articles and other goods were for sale, and all kinds of entertainment were offered. There were African dodgers, target galleries and all sorts of games for both old and young, which, with base ball, football and other sports, contrived to make the day an extremely busy one for all.

The only regrettable incident was the accidental shooting of a 7-year-old girl, Mary Flynn of Roxbury, who, however, is not thought to have been seriously injured. She was standing near a shooting gallery when another child happened to brush against a 22-calibre rifle that lay on the counter. The weapon was discharged and the bullet struck the child in the left breast, causing a slight wound. She was attended by a physician, and later removed to the Newton Hospital.

The feature of the picnic was a Gaelic football game, played by the Sarsfields of Waltham and the Garry-

THE BIG TRIENNIAL EXPOSITION.

IT IS HIS FAIR TO PROVE A PERFECT KALEIDOSCOPIC OF MECHANICAL INGENUITY, MERCANTILE PRODUCTS AND 20TH CENTURY NOVELTIES.

It is doubtful if any one feature of the 2nd Triennial Exposition to be held at Mechanics' Building, Boston, next month has attracted such universal attention or created such a degree of public curiosity as that of aerial navigation. Just at present this particular subject seems to possess the minds of everyone, and in view of the experimental flights of the Santos Dumont ship in Paris, and of Prof. Langley's Buzzard on the lower Potomac, in this country, the long cherished desire for navigating the air appears very near its fulfillment. Nor is Prof. Langley alone on this side of the Atlantic, for simultaneously with the announcement of his probable success comes the news of Prof. Alexander Graham Bell's experiments in a similar direction, and also of Emile Berliner. All three gentlemen are distinguished inventors, the latter two having won fame and fortune for their discoveries and devices in connection with the telephone. Now comes the announcement that they will in all probability

Death of Dr. Hovey.

The Rev. Alvah Hovey, D. D., one of the best known Baptist clergymen in the country and for many years the president of the Newton Theological Institution (Baptist), died last Sunday evening at his home on Sumner street, Newton Centre.

Early in the summer Dr. Hovey had a paralytic shock, and since then had been in failing health. His death, which occurred about 7 o'clock, had been expected for the past two weeks.

Shortly after the venerable clergyman had passed away, a message was sent to the First Baptist church, where an evening meeting was in progress, and read from the pulpit by the pastor. The news caused sorrow over the congregation.

Dr. Hovey was a native of Breen, N. Y., where he was born on March 15, 1820. He was one of eight children, the youngest of whom is now about 70 and the oldest about 87 years old.

His earliest years were passed in Vermont. He entered Dartmouth College in 1839, and was graduated with the class of 1844. He obtained his theological instruction in the school at Newton Centre, for which he was destined later to be so many years its head. Dr. Sears and Dr. Hackett, two widely known theologians, were his teachers. Upon graduation he received a call to the Baptist church in New Gloucester, Me., where he preached a year, but refused a settlement, owing to a previous call from his alma mater.

The first chair occupied by the young professor was that of church history, which he held until 1855, when he was transferred to the chair of theology. For 46 consecutive years he gave instruction in that branch. In 1868 he was elected president of the institution and occupied that position until June 1, 1900, when he retired on account of ill-health. Up to this year, however, he remained associated with the faculty, occupying the chair of general introductions and apologetics.

He was succeeded as president by the Rev. Nathan E. Wood, the present head of the institution, who returned but a few days ago from a summer vacation trip through Europe.

Dr. Hovey was a trustee of Worcester Academy and Brown University, vice-president and trustee of Wellesley College, a corporate member of the General Theological Library of Boston, a member of the board of managers of the American Tract Society, a member of Victory Institute of London, trustee of the New England Conservatory of Music, member of the Theological Club "C. C.," honorary member of the Boston Social Union, member of the Harvard Biblical Club, the Theological Circle and the Neighbors of Newton Centre.

He is survived by his wife, who was Miss Augusta Maria Rice of Newton Centre, and four children, Prof. George R. Hovey, Fred H. Hovey, Helen A., wife of W. B. Parshley of Yokohama, Japan, and Hattie L., wife of the Rev. John R. Gow of Somerville.

Third Prize

owens of Newton Lower Falls. There were two 20-minute halves and, as 25 men played on a side, the fun was fast and furious. The game resulted in a tie, the home team scoring a goal and the visitors four points, which counts as a goal.

A baseball game between teams representing the Savin Hill B. B. C. and the Twilight A. A. of Newton Lower Falls resulted in the defeat of the former by a score of 11 to 0.

The principal events were the 100-yd dash, which was won by J. C. Dolan, with Edward Troy, second; and a 40-yards dash, which was won by J. C. Dolan, with Thomas Donovan second.

In the evening the grounds were lighted with hundreds of Chinese lanterns, and dancing was enjoyed in a large pavilion by many of the young people. A display of fireworks late in the evening brought the affair to a close.

Real Estate.

Through the office of A. Dudley Dowd, Lydia A. Eaton has sold to Ann W. Lane of Boston the residence property No. 254 Commonwealth avenue, Newton boulevard, in the Chestnut Hill district. The lot has a frontage of about 75 feet on the south side, between Hammond street and Manet road. The house is a frame dwelling of twelve rooms. The property is assessed on a valuation of $8000. The selling price is $10,000. Mr. Dowd has rented the estate for a term of years to Charles S. Burgess of Brookline, who will take immediate possession.

A transfer of the property at 65 Aspinwall avenue, Brookline, has been made, Annie D. Francis conveying to Charles F. Avery of Newtonville. The property consists of a frame house and 3762 feet of land, situated near Brook street, and has a total taxed value of $7600, of which $2100 is on the land.

Death of Mrs. Kendal

Mrs. Samuel W. Kendal, a former well known resident of this city and mother of Mr. Henry W. Kendal of Park street, died last Saturday at her home in Chelsea, aged 85 years. Mrs. Kendal's maiden name was Jane Elizabeth Brigham, and she was the seventh in line from the first Thomas Brigham, who came to America in 1636 and settled in Watertown. Her father was born in Marlboro in 1771, and commanded a regiment in the war of 1812. He was the son of Capt. William Brigham, who commanded a company of Minute Men at the battle of Bunker Hill. Her mother was Mary Hubbard of Leicester, born in 1789.

She was the oldest living descendant of the Brigham family of New England, the oldest living member of the Immanuel Baptist church of Newton, and possessed remarkable energy of character and very positive ideas of religion. She was the mother of 13 children, three only surviving her: Henry W. Kendal of Newton, Mrs. Edward P. Briggs of Chelsea and E. W. Kendal of New York city.

Funeral services were held Monday, at the home of her son, Henry W. Kendal, 91 Park street, Newton. The Rev. Frank B. Matthews officiated, assisted by the Rev. A. L. Hudson. Music was furnished by the Immanuel church quartet. The burial was at the Newton cemetery.

be among the exhibitors at the Merchants and Manufacturers Exposition. Indeed, Prof. Bell's models of his latest invention, and aeroplane, have already arrived and are ready to be placed in position with other airship exhibits at the fair.

This department, however, is but one of many connected with the great Exposition, which is thrown open to all products of civilization, the idea being to show the giant progress made in productions and manufactured articles, and in the field of invention since the last Triennial. The management has spared no expense. Every corner and niche in Mechanics' building, with its six acres of space will furnish something or other of interest to the public. If you discard every other attraction, the music alone will compel your attention and appreciation. It will be of the very best that money and good judgment can secure. Creators and his famous band will lead off for the first fortnight, with the possibility of remaining three weeks, and if it can be arranged, Sousa will follow for the closing nights of the Exposition. Then for miscellaneous entertainment, there will be offered such features as the "Midway," Japanese Tea Garden with its Geisha girls, the Infant Incubators, the Laughing Bird of Paradise, Jim Key, the famous educated horse, and most interesting and instructive of all, the Government exhibit. The latter represents the department of War and the Treasury. Applications for this special Government exhibit have just been honored at Washington and the official notification has been received from the authorities permitting the transfer to the Mechanics' Building as one of the educational features of the Triennial. This is a concession and a privilege that cannot be too highly appreciated not alone from the view-point of private enterprise but rather as of a great public beneficence.

It is promised that every facility possible will be given to thoroughly investigate and comprehend the various inventions, mercantile products and other features of the exposition. Monday, October 5, is the date of the opening of the show.

Financial.

There has been little change in the monetary situation. The surplus reserves of the New York bank are still about twice as large as at this time a year ago. The long period of liquidation has released millions of money all over the country, and the West has not yet begun to call upon the East for cash. Confidence has been greatly strengthened by the extraordinary offer of Sec. Shaw to deposit $40,000,000 with the depository banks in case of stringency. The crop movement usually requires no more than this amount. The offer has had a good effect upon sentiment, and the banks have shown greater liberality in making mercantile loans. The advance in the Bank of England rate comes a little earlier than usual this year, but it will not check gold imports. There is every likelihood that there will be no hurry in the market this fall.

Death of Mrs. Cooley

Mrs. Charlotte Stoddard Cooley, wife of William H. Cooley, died suddenly Saturday evening at her home, 387 Central street, Auburndale, of heart failure, brought about, it is thought, by her hurrying to her home to escape the heavy rain.

The family had just returned from a vacation. Seeing the clouds as they left a train at the Riverside railroad station, they took a short cut up a steep hill to their home. Shortly after their arrival, Mrs. Cooley was taken ill.

Mrs. Cooley had lived in Newton for many years, first at Newton Centre, and later at Auburndale. She was a member of the Auburndale Congregational church. She is survived by her husband, three sons and three daughters.

Funeral services were held from the residence of her daughter Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock. Rev. C. M. Southgate, pastor of the Congregational church officiating, and the remains were taken to Northampton for burial on Wednesday.

Vacation Notes.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 1, 1903.

Dear Graphic:

I thought it might be of some interest to the readers of the Graphic to know how your representative is spending his vacation. No one can realize until they have tried it what a rest to tired nerves and body a sea voyage is—provided it is not rough—and such was my experience on the good ship Juniata of the Merchants and Miners line, which runs between Boston and Baltimore. The trip was delightful, sailing on a quiet sea with summer temperature and a pleasant company on board. We were out of sight of land much of the time the only points being seen were on the New Jersey coast, and in the near vicinity of Norfolk, Virginia. We arrived in Norfolk in the early morning, and spent the day in sight seeing. A party of us strolled around the place and then took a trolley car to Ocean view where the ferry runs to Old Point Comfort. As the boat was out of order we were in a quandary how to reach the other side, but finally a small sail boat was hired and we arrived at the Point safely, but somewhat wet from the waves, which had dashed over us. Old Point Comfort is one of the famous and popular resorts in America, and with its handsome Hotel Chamberlin, where the tourist can stop, is an ideal place to spend a few weeks. Famous in war as possessing the strongest fort in the land and as being the scene of conflict by land and sea it is hardly less famous in peace, as a fortress of health and thousands visit rock walled Fortress Monroe, every year. The stone battlements loom up grandly above the sea and the enormous guns seem to be keeping an alert watch to discover an approaching enemy. The presence of a regiment at the fort with the guard mounting in the morning, and the dress parade a half hour before sunset adds interest to the place. From here we went on to the Soldiers' home at Hampton, beautifully situated in extensive grounds, and where several thousand old veterans are passing their declining years in ease and comfort. The Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institute, which was founded by Gen. Armstrong in 1868, is close by and a student guide us about the grounds and through the buildings. There are 800 students, 100 of them Indians, and 300 are girls. The sixty buildings include dormitories and recitation halls the Memorial church, Cleveland Hall chapel, Huntington memorial Library, and various industrial buildings. From there we went on to Newport News where the steamer was waiting for us. The trip up Chesapeake Bay was exceedingly pleasant and in the early morning we arrived at Baltimore. Two things interested me exceedingly in this vicinity: one was the unlimited number of watermelons seen on every hand and the other the negro, a product of the South which is in evidence everywhere. One of the best places to see this species of the human race is on the wharves when a steamer is being unloaded, then they form in line and after answering their mate to the roll call proceed to their allotted task, singing, the while, some quaint ditty of their race. At Baltimore the main points of interest are the Johns Hopkins Institution and hospital, Druid Hill and Patterson parks, the Washington Monument, and Mount Vernon Square. From here I took a side trip to Annapolis, an old town, the capital of the state, and a place full of historical interest. The house can be seen where Gen. George Washington lived shortly after the close of the war of the Revolution, and where he resigned his sword to Congress as Commander-in-Chief December 23rd, 1783; also St. Ann's church, Carver Hall, the State House and the handsome State Library, now in process of construction. The Naval Academy is beautifully located on a sloping tract of land with finely equipped buildings where the hundreds of students are prepared for duty in Uncle Sam's navy. I only saw the freshman class at dress parade as the others were off on the summer cruise.

Washington was my next objective point and I shall write briefly of the places I saw as every one is familiar with our Capital city. As one approaches the city the lofty dome of the Capitol is in sight looming upward in imposing grandeur and in the far distance the Washington Monument can be plainly seen. Among other attractions are the New Congressional Library, the Smithsonian Institution, the Army Medical Museum, the Corcoran Art Gallery, National Observatory, Patent office and Pension building where the inaugural ball is held.

Washington is rich in public statues of such distinguished Americans as Farragut, Scott, Jackson, Lincoln, Jefferson, Sherman, the immortal Washington and many others. The "Seeing Washington" car is worthy of patronage and two subjects should receive more than passing notice: the monument and the new library building. The monument, and obelisk 555 feet high, from the floor entrance to the tip is situated in Washington Park, a part of the mall, and has 900 steps and an elevator to carry passengers to the top. The material is white marble and it is the highest work of masonry in the world being exceeded in height only by the Eiffel Tower, of iron, 984 feet high. Memorial stones were set in the inner face of the monument the series beginning at the 30 foot landing and extending to a height of 280 feet. The 179 stones were contributed from various sources as tributes to Washington, many states being represented, and the seal of Massachusetts occupies a prominent position, 70 feet from the base.

The interior of the Congressional library is without doubt the finest and most artistic piece of architecture on this side of the Atlantic and can be eclipsed by very few structures abroad. It is of Italian Renaissance, has three stories with a dome and consists of a great central rotunda which is a reading room; from which radiate book stacks and which is included in a parallelogram of galleries and pavilions. The building material employed is, for the exterior walls, white New Hampshire granite and for the inner courts Maryland granite and white enameled bricks. Fine Italian marble was used in the vestibule and halls and the pictures on the walls, the mosaics and the statuary would take many days of study to thoroughly comprehend.

The soldiers' home on the northern hills is for the benefit of men who have been honorably discharged from the regular army after 20 years of service or who have been disabled by wounds or disease. There are five dormitory buildings with accommodations for 800. The grounds comprise 512 acres and several of the presidents have spent the summer months here.

At Arlington, near Fort Myer, sleep 16,000 soldiers who died in the war for the Union. The Arlington House was built in 1802, by George Washington Parke Custis, grandson of Mrs. George Washington and adopted son of General Washington. Lafayette was among the many prominent guests who had visited there and finally it came into the hands of Mary Custis Lee wife of Gen. Robert E. Lee to whom she was married in the drawing room in 1831.

A beautiful sail of 16 miles on the Potomac brings the tourist to Mount Vernon, the home of Washington and near the house on the slope of the hill is his tomb. The house is full of interesting relics and the view from the broad veranda is very fine. My trip in the South was completed most pleasantly with a few days visit with friends at Grassdale, near Gordonsville, Louisa county, Virginia. It is a typical southern mansion and all the white residents in the vicinity are genuine F. F. V. The weather was cool and delightful and the scenery beautiful. The roads, however, are bad for driving and as many of them go through private estates there are gates, to numerous to mention, to open and shut. During one ride I opened 10 gates which gave me all the exercise I needed for the day.

THE PLAYHOUSE.

Boston Theatre—Now and then Boston gets a play that is distinctly a Boston made affair and it was an occasion of this sort which Kathryn Osterman appears in "Miss Petticoats" at the Boston Theatre for two weeks, commencing next Monday night. Many theatre-goers will recognize this title as the same as that of a novel which has been very widely read in Boston and New England during the past year and a half. The dramatization was made by Mr. Richardson, one of the authors of the book. The opening performance in Boston will practically be the first on any stage, for the only preliminary performances are on Friday and Saturday nights and Saturday matinee at the Hyperion theatre, New Haven, September 11 and 12. Excellent reports come from the rehearsals which are being held in New York under the direction of John W. Mitchell. The production is made up of a very elaborate scale with special scenery by Messrs. Rafter and Angewine. The roll of "Miss Petticoats" assumed by Miss Osterman is said to afford splendid opportunities for displaying some very attractive gowns and these she has taken advantage of to the fullest extent.

Grand Opera House—Nothing that comes to Grand Opera House can claim a more extensive following of those who like a stage entertainment that gives them plenty of reason to laugh than the Bryne Brothers in "8 Bells," which comes to that theatre next week. Often as this combination of farce-comedy, gymnastics and general jollity has been seen in this city, each passing season witnesses changes for the better in its many mirth-provoking scenes, and of course this confession to the public's appetite for novelty has not been neglected in the present instance. The Bryne Brothers have lots of new and funny business in addition to the favorite old specialties, and those who can't find laughter in the ground and lofty tumbling, the odd encounters and the thousand and one merry circumstances crowding through "8 Bells" couldn't find it in the dictionary. The usual matinees will be given on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday.

Boston Theatre—That most successful of all rural dramas, "Quincy Adams Sawyer," which plays its annual engagement at the Boston Theatre, commencing September 28th, and remaining three weeks, made its first visit to Vermont during the past two weeks and has been breaking records wherever it has appeared. This will be the fourth engagement of the play at the Boston Theatre and the many thousands who have attended performances during previous visits to that playhouse can testify heartily to the very pleasant remembrances they have of this delightfully true and simple presentation of country life. Its situations are all true to life. There is not an unnatural character, scene, remark, or conversation in the entire play. The same company which presented "Quincy Adams Sawyer" last season will be at the Boston Theatre again in September.

Keith's Theatre—All of greater Boston in search of novelty in amusement will visit Keith's the week of Sept. 14, for an act is to be put on there that has been the talk of New York all summer long, attracting to one of the most noted roof gardens not only the everyday amusement seekers but all of the "400" in the metropolis or adjacent thereto. Ned Weyburn's minstrel misses is made up of 17 lively and prepossessing girls who give a minstrel first part that it would be hard to beat. They black up in view of the audience, something that has not been done on the stage for many a day. The surrounding show is fully up to the standard of the star act and includes among others the following entertainers: Frances Gerard, a wonderful European equilibrist; the Alboil troupe of instrumentalists, consisting of four women and a man, all talented musicians; Tim Cronin, in imitations of American and European vaudeville stars; Cackley and McBride, the greatest step dancers in the profession, lately with "Peggy from Paris;" and Mr. and Mrs. Breen, comedy jugglers, and Cherry and Bates trick and fancy bicycle experts. It will be one of the notable shows of the season in many respects.

By Trolley

Trolley rides have now become quite popular, and are enjoyed almost daily by lodges, clubs and family parties. The ride from Boston to Worcester, a distance of about 40 miles, and return, is one of the most delightful that we know of, the route being through a country abounding in beautiful scenery and dotted with places of historic interest.

Knowing that many of our readers are interested in this subject, the Graphic has made arrangements with the publisher of an attractive little book entitled "Boston-Worcester Trolley" giving a description of the line, a very handsomely illustrated with half-tone cuts, time tables, distances between stations, fares, time consumed and much other information, for a limited number of copies, to be given to subscribers of this paper.

The book was compiled by R. H. Derrah, the originator and successful operator of the "Personally conducted trolley trips" scheme, and which have in the past been enjoyed by so many of our citizens.

Any subscriber can have one of these books by calling at this office, or one will be sent to the address of any subscriber on receipt of a 2-cent stamp. Persons not subscribers desiring a copy of the book can obtain one by presenting or sending the heading to this article to the GRAPHIC office. A 2-cent stamp, to pay postage, must accompany requests by mail.

Letter to Dr. F. W. Webber,

Dear Sir:—You can put $100 in your pocket if you can put us in the wrong.

Devote Lead and Zinc is all paint. It takes fewer gallons to paint a house than with mixed paints. It wears longer than lead and oil-mixed paints, too. The State chemists of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, New York and Pennsylvania have analyzed it and say it is pure.

If you can prove that any of these things aren't so, we've a hundred dollars waiting for you. If these things are true, what paint will you use next time you paint your house? What will you say to the people that ask you?—For doctors get asked queer questions.

If you know of an honest young painter who isn't getting the grip on life that he ought to have, give him this hint: Devote lead and zinc—that'll do it, if he does his work as well as the paint does its.

Yours truly,
F. W. Devote & Co.,

PRIMARY ELECTIONS.

One of the most serious questions to be settled at the approaching state election is that of the acceptance or rejection of the primary election which will be submitted to the voters at that time.This law, in brief, contemplates that caucuses of all political parties shall hereafter be held at the same time, in the same place and shall be conducted in this same manner as regular elections.It will be remembered that at present, each party calls its own caucuses at a time determined by its state committee, and that the city then provides a place and the paraphernalia necessary for the occasion.
Each party provides its own caucus officers, and makes its own returns to the proper state or city official. A lack of system, generally characterizes the present returns and when party contests are fought out at the caucuses, there is usually complaint of unfair dealing, fraud and repeating. Another serious evil is the participation in one caucus by a voter who usually sides with another political party.The primary election law, if adopted, will prevent all of these evils. The regular election officers will be in charge, and a voter, after giving his name, will ask for the ticket of the particular party, in whose caucus he desires to participate. A note of the party so selected will be placed beside his name on the check list, and at future caucuses he will be unable to obtain any other party ballot, for a stated time, except through considerable red tape.The new law therefore provides a simple and practical scheme of party enrollment in addition to its other good features.The need of primary elections is not so pressing in this city as it is in other places, but its desirability is so marked that it should be heartily adopted next November.Combined with the scheme of direct nominations, it presents a system which will largely eliminate present political rings and cliques, and give to the individual voter that power and influence which is the theory but not the practise of our government.The death of Dr. Hovey will cause more than local sorrow as he was known and respected in the entire Baptist denomination as one of its leaders in thought and influence. To the thousands of young men who have been under his teaching, he was almost a father and their sorrow is deep and keen. As a neighbor and friend, Dr. Hovey was sincerely loved and respected and his death is a personal bereavement to the entire community.

Death of Mr. Barnes

News has been received in Newton of the sudden death about August 20 of Charles A. Barnes, a son of Mrs.
Lydia J. and the late Francis G.
Barnes, of this city, near Lincoln, Cal. Further than that the body was found badly mangled on a railroad track, none of the details are yet known.Mr. Barnes, who is a brother of Edward F. Barnes, a real estate dealer, was a native of Waltham, and was about 42 years old. When he was a young boy, the family removed to Newton, where he was educated.About 20 years ago he left Newton for the west, and finally entered the employ of the Northern Pacific railroad as assistant freight agent at Tacoma Wash. After 10 years of service, he gave up the position to become purser of the steamer Yokohama, running between Tacoma, Honolulu, Hongkong and Yokohama, Japan. Three years later he went south and entered the employ of the Central Georgia railroad as assistant freight agent at Savannah, Ga. He remained with the road until the breaking out of the Spanish-American war when he enlisted in company B, 2 Georgia volunteers. He was appointed 1st sergeant, and served with the company until the end of the war. On being mustered out he returned to the west and interested himself in mining. During these years he had several times visited his relatives in Newton.
About three weeks ago a letter was received from him, dated at Roseville, Cal., saying he intended to leave for the northern part of the state to inspect some mining properties. That was the last heard from him up to the notice of his death.Tutoring done in College and

THE LATE OTIS PETTEE.

Death of John McAdams

"I've a dead man in my hack," was the announcement made by John Casey, a Brookline driver, Tuesday afternoon, as he rushed into Station 3, Newton. Supposing the man meant that his passenger was overcome by liquor, the officers opened the hack to remove him. They were surprised when they found that the man inside was lifeless. The dead passenger was John McAdams, 48 years old, of 67
Morse street, Newton. He was a painter and yesterday was working on a house in Brookline from the Newton firm of Hough & Jones. Suddenly McAdams was taken violently ill and a doctor was called. As the doctor ordered his removal to the hospital, he was hastily placed in a hack and the driver was told to take him to the Newton Hospital. Mc-Adams expired a few minutes before the hack reached station 3. The body was taken to McAdams' home, where it was later viewed by the medical examiner. The dead man is a native of Scotland, Me., and leaves a wife and six children.

THE PLAYHOUSE.

Majestic Theatre

"Girls Will Be Girls" enters upon its second week at the Majestic next Monday evening. William A. Brady's interesting production of Joseph Hart's and R. Melville Baker's musical farce appears to have attracted no end of favorable attention here, the demand for seats being the largest recorded for a performance of the kind since this house was opened to the public. This success may be attributed to several causes, but probably to none more correctly than to the fact that the piece, while amusing throughout, is utterly lacking in suggestive lines and salacious incidents.
The local engagement is limited by the necessity for returning to New York for an indefinite run scheduled to begin early in October, and, during the remainder of the stay here matinees will be given Wednesdays and Saturdays.

Kingsley's Love For Children.

The love of many women may be as great, but of few is it as once so wise and so great as that which Charles Kingsley had for his children. For the sake of their health he built for them an outdoor nursery on the highest point of his rectory house, and there he would join them when his work was done, bringing a wild flower, a fern, a beetle, a lizard, a field mouse or something that would draw forth their powers of observation and make them fond of the works of God's hand. "Oh, daddy, look at this delightful worm!" one of his guests heard, not without surprise, his little girl say. Kingsley was careful not to confuse his children by a multitude of small rules. "It is difficult enough to keep the Ten Commandments," he would say, "without making an eleventh in every direction." He had no "moods" with his family, for he cultivated by strict self discipline, in the midst of worries and pressing business, a disengaged temper, that always enabled him to enter into other people's interests, and especially into children's playfulness. He became a light hearted boy in the presence of his children. When nursery griefs and broken toys were taken to his study he was never too busy to mend the toy and dry the tears.—Chicago Record-Herald.

The Modern Way.

"Can I support you in the style to which you have been accustomed?" he asked.—Puck.

The Lines in One's Palm.

Square or spatulated fingers in the science of palmistry denote the philosophical and practical temperament, taper fingers signify an artistic temperament and very pointed digits are a sure sign of the dreamy, psychical nature. Much is learned by the general quality and configuration of the lines which cross the latter. The life line running around the base of the thumb denotes long or short life, good or ill health, according as it is long or short, clear and unbroken or otherwise. The heart line, running across the palm nearest the base of the fingers, signifies the quality of the possessor's emotional nature, also the kind of love she will give and receive. This will be enduring or temporary according to whether the line be long and clear, forked or crossed and chinked. Below this is the head line, which indicates the mental and moral qualities and achievements and deficiencies.

The line of fate runs perpendicularly across the middle of the palm and is a very important factor in the happiness or unhappiness of its owner. It should be clear and narrow, unchinked and uncrossed by the fine wrinkles which score so many palms, and it should never come to an end on the line of the heart, since this signifies disappointment in love. A cross on the "mount of Mercury," which is just at the base of the fore or index finger, is an unfailing sign of a happy marriage.

The First Wedding Ring.

The wedding ring, according to Henry Swinburne of the seventeenth century, was first designed by Prometheus and fashioned out of adamant and iron by Tubal Cain. He says that it was "given by Adam to his son to this end—that therewith he should espouse a wife." Men were, as all women know, deceivers ever, and some of these unscrupulous creatures were wont to wed with rings made of rushes, imagining them to be less binding than a strong and valuable ring. The bishop of Salisbury, however, stepped in and forbade this practice in 1217.

Silver was more frequently used than gold for wedding rings, and they were made in all kinds of shapes, some twisted, like two joined hands, or a pair of hearts stuck together with an arrow. Often they were adorned with precious stones and had "posies"—that is, scraps of verse—inscribed, such as: Fortune doth send you, hap it well or ill. This plain gold ring to wed you to your will.

Little Sister's Rejoinder.

Out in the east end is a young woman whose little sister is much inclined to ask numerous questions and though she is sometimes a little slow about understanding things in general, she is as quick to see a point as most little girls of six. The other day Little Sister asked Big Sister the direction to the home of a new acquaintance. Big Sister tried her best to make the way plain to no avail, and finally becoming exasperated, exclaimed: "Oh, follow your nose, Nan, and you will finally find the place."

"Well, if you ever follow your nose," came the quick retort, "you will go up, and up, and up, and be an angel by and by, which you're not now."

Which reference to a nose inclined to be pug ended the controversy.—Pittsburg Gazette.

The First "Lady in Trade."

Perhaps the most notable instance on record of the feminine street trader is that of the "White Widow," otherwise the Duchess of Tyronnell, the Frances Jennings of the De Grammont memoirs, who, at the time of the revolution in 1688, according to Horace Walpole, "being reduced to absolute want on her arrival in England and unable for some time to procure secret access to her family, hired one of the stalls under the Royal Exchange and maintained herself by the sale of small articles of haberdashery. She wore a white dress wrapping her whole person and a white mask, which she never removed, and excited much interest and curiosity."—London Chronicle.

A Baker's Dozen.

The expression "baker's dozen," which is in point of fact thirteen, has a history. For a baker in the olden times to give short weight in bread exposed him to considerable penalties, and thus the custom arose of adding an extra loaf to the dozen as compensation for any possible deficiencies in the rest of the batch. The extra article was originally a safeguard to avert the chances of a heavy fine.

The Editor's Fear.

The Antiquities Were Out.

CHAPTER XXI.

THE ACTUITY OF DESPAIR.

ON the spar deck things had gone better. Though De Chamillard and his marines had been driven from the poop by the fire of the English, the men in the tops had more than evened that reverse. As the two ships lay side by side the interlocking yards made a convenient bridge from one to the other, over which a bold man might pass. It happened that some of the choicest spirits on the Richard were stationed in the mainmast. Fanning, who had been busily engaged with small arms, saw his opportunity. As the little parties in the two tops exchanged volleys the midshipman threw his men on the yard, and as the smoke cleared away the astonished British saw the Americans rushing toward them.

The first and second men were shot down and fell to the deck of the Serapis. The third, a gigantic man, by a desperate leap gained a foothold in the top. Before he was cut down Fanning and another had joined him over the futtock shrouds. Two men took the defenders in the rear by way of the lubber's hole. The rest came swarming. The force of their rush carried everything before it. The English, unable to stand the irresistible onset, were shot down or thrown out of the top. No quarter was asked or given. The Americans, having effected this lodgment in the mainmast of the Serapis, now turned their fire upon the fore and mizzen tops and enabled boarding parties from their own ship to gain possession of all the upper works of the enemy.

It was at this moment that the gunner and the carpenter reached the deck, crying that the ship was sinking and proffering to surrender. The gunner ran aft shrieking: "Quarter! Quarter!" intending to lower the flag. Jones, who had been superintending the working of the quarter deck guns, which were without an officer since Meuse, who had been fighting heroically, had been severely wounded, of course heard the noise, and, turning about, saw the gunner running for the flag. Fortunately the flag had been shot away, and as the gunner was seeking it, stumbling over the hatchways in the darkness, Pearson, hearing the cries, called out again:

"Do you ask for quarter?"

Jones had taken two long steps across the deck to the side of the gunner. Seizing his discharged pistol, he brought the butt of it heavily down upon the forehead of the man, cracking his skull and silencing him forever.

"Never!" he shouted in reply to the Englishman.

"Then I will give none!" said Pearson—an entirely superfluous remark, by the way.

It was at this juncture that the Alliance was seen coming down again as before. Jones had time but for one glance of apprehension when he heard the noise of the leaping prisoners below. He sprang to the main hatch.

"The prisoners have been released," cried De Weibert, meeting him. The Frenchman had been telling like a hero on the gun deck. "The battery is silenced; we have not a single gun to work; the ship is afire! We must yield!" he exclaimed.

As the frightened men came crowding up the hatchways Dale, who had just fired the only remaining gun on the deck that was left fit for action, took in the situation at once. He stayed the rush in the nick of time by voice and action. He sprang into the midst of them, threatening them, striking them, beating them down, driving them back with his sword. It was a magnificent display of hardihood and courage, presence of mind and resource.

"To the pumps!" he cried with prompt decision. "For your lives, men! The English ship is sinking, and we'll go down with her unless you can keep us afloat!" he shouted in thunder tones with superb audacity. The but-tle lost was won again in that instant. "Well done, Richard!" shouted Jones, leaping through the hatchway and seconding the daring ruse of his noble lieutenant by his own mighty voice and herculean efforts, crying masterfully: "Get to the pumps, men! Live! for God's sake! The ship is sinking under your feet! The English ship is going!"

It was unparalleled assurance, but it won. The two officers actually succeeded in forcing the English prisoners to man the pumps, where they worked with a frantic energy born of their persistent daze of terror. This left the regular crew of the ship free to fight the fires and to do what they could with the remaining guns. As Jones sprang back to the quarter deck, the surgeon, covered with blood and appalled at the carnage, came running toward him, crying:

"The ship is sinking, sir! The cockpit is under water! I have no place to stow the wounded. We must surrender!"

"Strike! Strike!" cried De Chamillard, who was wounded. "We can do no more!"

"What, gentlemen," cried Jones, "would you have me strike to a drop of water and a bit of fire? Up, De Chamillard! Here, doctor, help me get this gun over."

The surgeon hesitated, looked around again, and, not liking the appearance of things about him, turned and ran below. Not to his station, for that was under water. His mates had been killed. He wandered up and down the decks, doing what he could—which was but little—for the wounded where they lay. Assisted by two or three of the seamen, with his own hands Jones dragged one of the 9 pounders from the disengaged side of the deck across to the starboard side to take the place of a dismounted one; and, while the heavy battery of the Serapis continued its unavailing fire below, these three small guns under his personal direction concentrated their fire upon the mainmast of the Serapis.

The fortuitous position of the Americans in the enemy's tops enabled them to pour a perfect rain of small arm fire upon the spar deck of the Serapis with little possibility of effective return. Man after man was shot down by the side of the intrepid Pearson, who, whatever his other lack of qualifications, showed that he possessed magnificent personal courage, until he remained practically alone upon the deck—alone and as yet undaunted.

It is impossible to describe the scene. It is not within the power of words to portray the situation, after over two hours of the most frightful and determined combat. No two ships were ever in such condition. No battle that was ever fought was like it. The decks were covered with dead and dying. Bands of men in different directions were fighting the fires. The smoke in lowering clouds hung heavily over the ships, for the wind had died and there was scarcely enough to blow it away. The pale moonlight mingled with the red glare from the flames and threw an added touch of lurid ghastliness trembling over the smoke-wrapt sea. From below came the steady roar of the Serapis' guns, from above the continuous cracking of the Richard's small arms. The noises blended in a hideous diapason of destruction which rose to an offended heaven in the horrid discord of an infernal region. The prisoners, still under the influence of their terror, tolled at the clanking pumps. The water gushed redly from the bleeding scuppers. Order, tactics, discipline, had been forgotten. Men glared with blood-shot eyes, set their teeth beneath foam-flecked lips and fought where they stood—fought in frenzy against whatever came to hand, whether it was the English ship or the roaring flames or the rushing waters. They recked nothing of consequences. In their frantic battle lust they beat upon the sides of the other ship with their bare hands and bloody knuckles and knew not what they did. Their breath came quick and short. The red of battle was before their vision. They had but one thought—slay, kill! One would have said that the brute instinct was uppermost in every heart. But in scenes of this kind it is not the greatest brute that wins, but the greatest soul, and the one man who still preserved his calmness in this orgy of war was the man to win the battle—Jones.

The Alliance had repented her previous performance, but the men had been worked to such a pitch that they never heeded her. Many of them did not know of it. Both ships were thoroughly beaten. It was a question as to which would realize it first, who would first surrender. Nay, there was no question whatever of Jones' surrender. No question of Jones' surrender under any circumstances whatsoever. Pearson would give up under some conditions, and those had at last arrived. That was the essential difference between the two men. It was radical.

"Send Mr. Dale to me," said Jones to young Brooks as the flag came down. The midshipman had been wounded, but still kept his station.

As Dale came running toward his captain Jones cried:

"Mustn't a boarding party and take charge of the prize. The fight is over!"

But, no, the battle was not over. A few moments before an English ship captain among the prisoners had succeeded in escaping through the rents in the shattered sides of the two ships and had told the pilot of the Richard to the first lieutenant of the Serapis.

With this information the men on the gun deck had been rallied and, led by their officers, had returned to their quarters and resumed the battle. They, too, were heroes. Maynard, who ran aft from the forecabin as he saw Pearson strike his flag, jumped on the rail by Jones' orders and followed Dale upon the deck of the English ship. Such was the confusion of the moment that as Maynard leaped on the deck he was actually run through the thigh by a pike in the hand of a wounded British sailor. Pearson was standing alone as if dazed, on the quarter deck of his ship, holding one clinched hand against his breast, with the other grasping his trailing flag. In his face was that look of defeat and despair which is the saddest aspect of battle, impotent humanity.

"Have you struck, sir?" cried Dale, stopping before the English captain.

"Yes," was the grim reply. His voice was a broken whisper indicating in the tones his mental agony.

"I am come to take possession," "Very good, sir," said Pearson bitterly, as before, and dropping the flag. Then he reached for his sword.

Just at this moment Pascoe, the first lieutenant of the Serapis, came bounding up the hatchway from the deck below.

"A few more broadsides, sir, and they are ours!" he cried impetuously. "They are in a sinking!"

"The ship has struck, sir, and you are my prisoner," interrupted Dale quickly, seeing the necessity of promptitude.

"Strike! This ship! Your prisoner!" cried the astonished Englishman.

"You sir, Your sword!" demanded Pearson, standing alone as if dazed.

grenades out on the extreme end of the main yardarm. Wrapping his legs around the yard, he sat down, and, leaning against the lift, deliberately threw his bombshells, one by one, down the open main hatchway of the Serapis. The powder boys of the latter ship had been bringing charges of powder for the various guns from the magazine, and, as many of the guns had been put out of action by the American fire, the supply had been greater than the demand. A large pile had been carelessly allowed to accumulate upon the deck. One of the grenades landed against the hatch combing and fell into the center of the charges.

There was a detonating crash, so loud, so terrific, that it actually seemed to blow even the roar of the battle into eternity. Twenty or thirty men were killed or badly wounded, many of them torn to atoms by the explosion, and the rest of the men on the English-man's deck were dazed and driven from their stations by the concussion. The clothes of many were actually ripped from their bodies, so that they stood naked and wondering, though they were otherwise unhurt. A long moment of ghastly silence succeeded this accident on the Serapis. Men everywhere paused with bated breath to wait the issue. The Serapis, dragging the Richard, reeled and rocked under the shock. It was a last catastrophe which broke the strength of Pearson's endurance and ended his resistance. He could fight no more. Was it the devil himself who commanded the other ship? The English captain sprang aft to the mizzenmast. A great English standard had been nailed to the timber of the spar. With his own hands he tore it down. The battle was over! At the same moment the mainmast of the Serapis, undermined and eaten away in its heart by the gnawing attack of the quarter deck guns of the Richard, came crashing down, a hopeless ruin, carrying some of the Americans into eternity as it fell.

"They have struck their flag!" cried Jones, who had sprung upon the rail at the moment of the explosion and had witnessed Pearson's action. "Cease firing!"

His voice rang through the ship with such a note of proud triumph as has rarely been heard within the fought-out confines of the narrow seas.

"They have struck! The ship is ours!" ran from man to man among the Americans. Wild cheers broke into the night in an ever increasing volume of sound.

"Send Mr. Dale to me," said Jones to young Brooks as the flag came down. The midshipman had been wounded, but still kept his station.

As Dale came running toward his captain Jones cried:

"Mustn't a boarding party and take charge of the prize. The fight is over!"

In his face was that look of defeat and despair which is the saddest aspect of battle, impotent humanity.

"Have you struck, sir?" cried Dale, stopping before the English captain.

"Yes," was the grim reply. His voice was a broken whisper indicating in the tones his mental agony.

"I am come to take possession," "Very good, sir," said Pearson bitterly, as before, and dropping the flag. Then he reached for his sword.

Just at this moment Pascoe, the first lieutenant of the Serapis, came bounding up the hatchway from the deck below.

"The ship has struck, sir, and you are my prisoner," interrupted Dale quickly, seeing the necessity of promptitude.

"Strike! This ship! Your prisoner!" cried the astonished Englishman.

"You sir, Your sword!" demanded Pearson, standing alone as if dazed.

Dale. The man hesitated.

"Disarm him!" cried the American. Two or three of the boarding parties closed around them.

"Sir," asked the lieutenant, turning to his captain, "is it true that we have struck?"

"Yes, sir," answered Pearson honestly.

"My God!" cried Pascoe. There was a momentary silence.

"I have nothing more to say, sir," he added. "I will go below and call off the men," said the lieutenant, turning away.

"No, sir!" interrupted Dale. "You will accompany your captain on board our ship at once. Pass the word to cease firing. The ship has struck."

As the English captain and his first lieutenant stepped over the rail upon the high poop of the Richard the roar of the guns died away. This time for good. Seizing a dangling rope, they swung themselves inboard and found themselves face to face with a little man in a tattered uniform, hatless, covered with dust and smoke, powder stained and grimy with the soil of the battle. Blood spattering from a wound in his forehead had congealed upon his cheek. He was a hideous looking spectacle. The red fire light played luridly upon him. Nothing but the piercing black eyes which burned and gleamed out of his face in the darkness bespoke the high humanity of the man.

"Is it?" "Captain John Paul Jones, at your service, gentlemen."

"My sword," said Pearson, tendering it to him formally. "I regret," he added ungraciously, "at being compelled to strike to a man who has fought with a halberd around his neck."

"Sir," said Jones, with a magnanimity as great as his valor, "you have fought like a hero, and I make no doubt that your sovereign will reward you in the most ample manner. Mr. Brooks, escort these gentlemen to my cabin."

The two ships were now cut adrift. Dale remaining on the Serapis to take command. He had sat down a moment for rest, and as he attempted to rise to his feet he fell to the deck, discovering only in that way that he had been severely wounded.

By the most heroic efforts of the prize crew on the Serapis and the remaining men on the Richard the English prisoners were driven back into the hold, the flames subdued and some semblance of order restored. Continually captured the Serapis after an hour of good hard fighting, and the victory was entirely won by the Americans. But it had been purchased at a fearful cost. There is no battle on land or sea in the world's history where the percentage of loss was greater than the battle between the Serapis and the Richard.

About 70 per cent on the Serapis and over 50 per cent on the Richard had been killed or wounded, and the Bon Homme Richard was in a sinking condition. She had been literally beaten to pieces. It was not safe to remain upon her decks. Consequently the prisoners and the wounded, groaning and crying in anguish, were removed to the Serapis. In the early morning of the day following, the brave ship which had earned undying immortality in her worst old age, because for three brief hours John Paul Jones and his men had battled upon her decks, sank forever beneath the sea.

The refitting of the prizes for the returning voyage was at once begun. To anticipate events, it is recorded that Captain Landale, the jealous and false-hearted Frenchman who had so treacherously maneuvered the Alliance, was subsequently court-martialed and dismissed from the service.

and Arthur Pouliot for wagon licenses; and of Donald Steward to sell food Sundays on the Charles River were referred to the Committee on Public Franchises. Similar action was taken on the petitions of the Telephone Co, for attachments on Park avenue, Waltham Wolcott, Ellis streets and Carleton road, for locations on Cherry, Bowers streets and on Somerset road; for conduits on Middlesex road and Hammond street, and to remove pole from Centre street; of the Gas Light Co, for poles on Columbus street, hearings being ordered before the committee thereon for October 1st.

Petition of H G Tucker to move a building from Beacon street to Deerfield road was granted. Similar action was taken on petitions of C F Danforth, H M Putney & Co, and J Hickey & Co, for wagon licenses.

A communication from Commissioner Elder relative to permit being issued for erection of a wooden block of stores on Watertown street by the Nonantum Worsted Co, was originally referred to the Committee on Public Works and then withdrawn on request of Alderman Lothrop. The alderman stated that the company was anxious to get to work on this building and reference would mean a delay of three weeks. He favored granting the petition. Alderman Brown did not believe in going against the city ordinances and opposed the license. Commissioner Elder explained the conditions and Alderman Brown then said he objected to this class of buildings going up. He cited the Ford buildings at Auburndale and a building at Chestnut Hill as samples, and said such buildings were eyesores.

Alderman Lothrop said the buildings proposed would not hurt the neighborhood and as all the surrounding stores were of wood and the company was a heavy tax payer, he favored the permit. On a rising vote the permit was then granted, 10 in favor to 7 against.

On motion of Alderman Ensign the portion of the City Clerk's report relative to care of Public records was referred to the Committee on Public Works.

COMMITTEE REPORTS.

Reports of the Committee on Public Franchises favoring the grant of attachments on Chestnut street and Webster park to the Telephone Co, was received. Reports from the same committee recommending leave to withdraw on petition of Domenico Fasoli for a street musician license and the grant of a common victualler license to Edward Johnson, Ward 4 and of a street musician license to Orazio Colanuca were accepted.

ORDERS.

These orders were adopted: Granting N E Telephone and Telegraph company attachments on Chestnut street, Walnut street, and on Webster park, designating polling places for state and city elections, establishing pay of election officers, and assigning hearing October 5 on laying out of Broadway under betterment act.

Alderman Ensign then referred to the pleasure of again meeting each other after the summer vacation and moved a vote of congratulations to Alderman Hubbard upon his recent appointment as a member of the state board of Pharmacy. The motion was adopted by a rising vote and Alderman Hubbard briefly responded, thanking the board for its congratulations.

And at 8:45 p m, the board adjourned.

Male applicants must weigh at least 125 pounds and be not less than 5 feet 4 inches in height.

This examination is open to all citizens of the United States who meet the requirements. Certifications from the registers will be without regard to any other consideration than the ratings obtained by those who successfully pass the examination, those securing the highest averages being placed at the head of the registers in the order of their respective average, and so on down.

Form 117 showing the requirements of the examination and containing a synopsis of the character of the different subjects thereof can be secured from Mr. Herbert F. Butler, at the post office, or E. E. Stebbins, Secretary of the Consolidated Board of Examiners, Room 141, Postoffice, Boston; also the required application blank, form No. 101. This latter form should be promptly executed and returned to either party. No application will be accepted for this examination after the close of business October 19, 1903.

The wedding of Mr. Dana M. Dutch, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Francis M. Dutch of West Newton, to Miss Nancy Fastnet Erskine, the daughter of Capt. and Mrs. James T. Erskine of Scarsport, Me., took place at the home of the bride in that town last Wednesday morning at 10:30 o'clock.

The house was decorated with potted plants and autumn flowers and the ceremony was performed by the Rev. T. P. Williams of the First Congregational church of Scarsport. The double ring service was used.

The bride was becomingly gowned in white muslin trimmed with tulle lace and carried a bouquet of brides roses. She was accompanied by her sister, Miss Harriett M. Erskine as maid of honor, and by these bridesmaids: Miss Agnes Park of Stockton, Me., Miss Katherine C. Nickels of Somerville, Mass., Miss Elizabeth Carver of Brooklyn, N. Y., Miss Edna Francis Dodge of Dorchester, Mass., and Miss Lucy Ann Sargent of Scarsport. Mr. Robert E. Hills of West Newton was the best man.

Now that ladies are getting their clothes into shape for cold weather, the announcement of Mme. Denise, warranted to fit, and by the aid of which great things are possible for the home dressmaker. All sorts of garments are cut and fitted at this establishment, and are put into such shape as to be easily finished at home. The lines on which Mme. PROPOSED NEW MEETING HOUSE OF THE FIRST CHURCH OF NEWTON CENTRE.

The laying of the corner stone of the sixth meeting house of the First church in Newton, at Newton Centre last week was a memorable occasion and we take pleasure in presenting our readers with a cut of the proposed building together with a view of the old building and a likeness of the late Rev. Daniel L. Furber, for many years the beloved pastor of this, the oldest church in Newton.

In the high and light basement are a dining room the size of the chapel, with ample and convenient kitchen arrangements, cloak-rooms for ladies and gentlemen, toilet rooms and a room for the Sunday school library. The upper story of the chapel provides on one side a room for the primary department of the Sunday school, with special toilet room, and on the other two classrooms for older pupils. Memorial Service.

A solemn and impressive memorial service for the Rev. Alvah Hovey, D. D., LL. D., the venerable former president of the Newton Theological Institution, was held last Sunday morning in the First Baptist church at Newton Centre. Over 500 people, representing the members of the church, members of the family, and the faculty and students from the theological institution were present.

The order of services after a congregational hymn, "A Mighty Fortress Is Our God," included scripture reading by the pastor, the Rev. Everett D. Burr, singing by the church choir of "All Day with God," the words of which were written by Dr. Hovey, and addresses, "Alvah Hovey, Teacher," by Prof. John M. English of Newton Centre; "Alvah Hovey, Author," by President Henry G. Weston, D. D., of Crozier Theological Institution of Chester, Pa.; "Alvah Hovey, Theologian," by Prof. William N. Clarke, D. D., of Colgate University; "Alvah Hovey, Educator," by the Rev. George E. Horr, D. D., of Boston, and "Alvah Hovey, Christian Leader," by President George E. Merrill of Colgate University, and formerly pastor of the Immanuel Baptist church of Newton.

Mr. Fred A. Hubbard

Alderman Fred A. Hubbard who was confirmed this week by the Governor's council as a member of the state board of Pharmacy needs no introduction to the people of this city. He was born at Manchester, N. H., in 1860 and removed when a boy to our neighboring town of Watertown. He graduated from the high school of that place and entered the drug business in the Sullivan drug store at Watertown. Later he came to Newton and engaged in business with Mr. Charles F. Rogers. With Mr. T. W. Proctor he succeeded Mr. Rogers in business and later became sole proprietor of Hubbard's drug store. Mr. Hubbard has filled many positions in the pharmaceutical world having been president of the state association for 2 years and also president for 2 years of the Boston Drugists' Association. He is a member of the Boston associated board of trade, and is a trustee of the Massachusetts College of Pharmacy. In this city Mr. Hubbard is now in his third year of service as an alderman from Ward One.

THE PLAYHOUSE.

Boston Music Hall—A story entirely different from any that has yet been told by melodramatic romancers is Messrs. Heuck and Ferness's new play, "The Charity Nurse," which comes to Boston Music Hall next Monday afternoon for a week's engagement. The scenes of the play are laid in New England and shift from the quiet Connecticut village to the busy, bustling metropolis of greater New York. Unusual as it may appear, there are no slum scenes, no uncalculated profanity, no gun plays nor impossible climaxes in "The Charity Nurse," but on the contrary a narrative of consistent events. The cast is said to be exceptionally good and should be with such an artist as Selma Herman portraying the leading role. In the part of "Beatie Chalmers" this gifted actress is said to be more than pleasing and to have really made the "hit" of her career.

Majestic Theatre—William A. Brady's production of R. Melville Baker and Joseph Hart's three-act musical absurdity, entitled "Girls Will Be Girls," has caught on in good shape at the Majestic Theatre, and is attracting enormous audiences to see this latest concoction in the way of fun, music and amusement. From the opening performance the comedy has moved smoothly. Unlike other musical comedies this one has a plot, but it is not too prominent. Next Monday will mark the beginning of the third and last week but one of this entertaining musical novelty and new features are to be added. The chorus is to be strengthened by the addition of sixteen pretty and vivacious girls who have been specially engaged, and new dialogue and music is to be added. Any one who enjoys a thorough evening of pleasure should not fail to witness "Girls Will Be Girls."

Grand Opera House—After all the melodramas, problem plays, tragedies and other attractions that we have had of late, the coming of "Happy Hooligan," one of the best farce musical comedies ever put together, to the Grand Opera House next week, will be a positive relief. Our theatre goes undoubtedly like melodrama, but when they are fed this class of attractions week in and week out, and have seen the triumph of virtue over vice repeated ad lib, they naturally yearn for a show in which mirth, music and beauty are combined, in other words they want to go to the theatre to laugh. They want to feast their eyes on pretty girls and beautiful costumes. They want to have their risibilities tickled and their sense of humor gratified. All of these desires will be filled by "Happy Hooligan."

Hub Theatre—The "Little Church Around the Corner," which made a decidedly favorable impression when presented at Music Hall last season, will be the attraction at the Hub Theatre next week, starting with a coupon matinee Monday afternoon when it will be seen for an engagement of one week. A company of exceptional ability is promised by the management as well as a magnificent scenic equipment. The scene depicting the "Little Church Around the Corner," brilliantly illuminated, with the snow softly falling, is conceded to be one of the most beautiful stage pictures ever presented.

Keith's Theatre—Patrons of Keiths will be offered another excellent bill for the week of Sept. 21, surrounding the big novelty act, Ned Wayburn's minstrel misses, which has secured a pronounced hit. Some of the prominent entertainers will be Sager Midgley and Gertrude Carline, in one of their amusing "Sammy and Sarah" sketches; the Three Richards acrobats and tumblers; Mark Sullivan, mimetic comedian; Witmar Robert Schmidt, the noted Janko pianist; "Jim" Harrigan, the "tramp" juggler, and Edwin Baker and company, in a delightful Japanese operetta. Another novelty will be a race on rollers between horse and a bicyclist in which the mechanism of the "County Fair" is put into vaudeville use. A remarkable motion picture, entitled "Fairland," will be exhibited in the bioscope.

Tremont Theatre—Henry W. Savage, himself a Bostonian, is one of the foremost producers of musical comedies, comic operas and grand operas in the world, and many of the first-night performances have been given in Boston. His latest offering will be a comic opera in two acts, called "The Yankee Consul," and Raymond Hitchcock, who scored such success as a star in "King Dodo," will play the title role. The new piece will be presented at the Tremont Theatre, Sept. 21, and it is promised that the production will be the most pretentious that has yet been made by the well known manager. There is every reason to believe that it will be a distinct success. Raymond Hitchcock, the star, is a comedian who enjoys the distinction of occupying a field with few, if any, competitors. Flora Zabelle will play the leading feminine, is a dainty comedienne. She has an excellent voice and charming personality, and is regarded as one of the handsomest women on the stage. "The Yankee Consul," with its clever principals, carefully selected chorus, elaborate costumes and scenery designed by Walter Burridge, will remain at the Tremont for a limited engagement only, as Manager Savage's famous opera company will begin about the middle of next month a season of grand opera in English.

A medium-priced, strictly nice family hotel; American plan; At table, rooms with board.

The new building is to be a solid and dignified structure, resembling an old English parish church, and well adapted to its rural surroundings. The capture of the depraved creature who has evidently committed the recent assaults upon women in this city will be received with great satisfaction. While the man has not been successful in his vicious work, he has thoroughly frightened the ladies and all will breathe more freely with the knowledge that he is behind the bars.

The police have done a fairly creditable piece of work in unearthing such a rascal and the sensational finish on Wednesday has caused considerable excitement in the city.

The scheme of turning over the park areas fronting on the Charles river to the metropolitan park commission seems to be feasible and will relieve the city from the care of nearly fifty acres of park land. These lands were purchased in the first place with the idea of protecting the river frontage and will fit very well into the plans of the park commission.

At the caucuses of the various parties to be held the coming week, the individual voter has practically his only opportunity to express his personal opinion as to the various candidates to be placed in nomination for the state election.

The resignation of Mr. Travis from the school committee is a matter of deep regret not only in Ward Seven but throughout the city, where Mr. Travis' high reputation is well known. We understand that the resignation was caused by business reasons.

Messrs Ivy and Proctor are altogether too good men to lead such a forlorn hope as the democratic nominees for the House. Representative Warren and James A. Lowell Esq., will be handsomely elected.

THE PLAYHOUSE.

Boston Theatre—An audience that filled the Boston Theatre, and cordially welcomed Kathryn O'Brien as a star and "Miss Petticoats" as one of the best plays to visit Boston in a long time, gave vent to its enthusiasm at the end of the great fourth act when the dignity of a grand ball at Countess Foray's is disturbed by the appearance of three old New England sailors, with whom the Countess Miss Petticoats joins in a lively sailor's hornpipe. This attraction opened its engagement at the Boston Theatre last Monday evening and will play its second and last week commencing next Monday Sept. 21.

With the engagement already extended from three weeks to four owing to the great advance interest manifested in the approaching run of the out look of "Quincy Adams Sawyer" at the Boston Theatre one week from Monday is most auspicious. No attraction in the past three seasons at this house has given greater general satisfaction and at the same time, drawn such an unbroken succession of "standing room only" audiences.

Globe Theatre—The beautiful Globe Theatre, at Washington and Beach street, Boston, which was formally opened to the public last Monday night, already has proved a very attractive addition to the city's playhouses. James K. Hackett, who with his company is playing an engagement which must end two weeks hence, has secured a very solid success with his new play "John Ermine, of the Yellowstone." Among the coming engagements at the Globe may be mentioned Miss Henrietta Crossman, as Rosalind in "As You Like It," Charles Richmond in a new play called "Captain Harrington," Miss Isabella Irving, Miss Christie McDonald, grand-daughter of Joseph Jefferson, in "An English Daisy," William Collier and others.

THE CHARLES C. BURR SCHOOL DEDICATED.

GOVERNOR BATES AND MAYOR WEEKS AMONG THOSE WHO TOOK PART.

The new Charles C. Burr school in Auburndale was dedicated Monday afternoon, with an interesting series of exercises, which were attended by Gov. Bates and about 400 residents of the village.

Seated on the platform beside Gov. Bates were the Hon. Edward L. Pickard, Mayor John W. Weeks, ex-Alderman W. A. Knowlton, Alderman Frederick Johnson, Edwin B. Haskell, President A. R. Weed of the aldermen, Charles W. Robinson, Supt. Frederick W. Atkinson of the Newton schools, Alderman Charles A. Brown, Isaac T. Burr, the Rev. Charles M. Southgate, Abbot Bassett of the school committee and others.

Previous to the formal opening, which was at 3:30 o'clock, the guests inspected the new building.

Mr. W. A. Knowlton, of the School board opened the exercises by introducing Mayor Weeks as the presiding officer.

Mayor Weeks said in part: There is but one voice in Newton in regard to the support to be given the schools, and that is that they should be liberally maintained and that permanent plants shall be as thoroughly built and equipped as far as modern conditions permit. The mayor emphasized the large amount expended upon new school buildings during the past ten years, and believed the city had nearly satisfied present necessities.

Comparing modern conditions with those of his boyhood days the mayor said we certainly should feel grateful that we live in a community which not only supplies the material for good work but also provide cultivated men and women as instructors, those who are making the proper training of children their life work and study.

Gov. Bates referred to Mr. John O. Godfrey, principal of the Williams public school at Auburndale, who died last July. He lived in East Boston, and was a great friend of the governor.

"Such men do not die. Their influence for good lives in the lives of others with whom they come in contact. The school room was established at the same time as the church in this country, when the Pilgrims landed. They are inseparable and must continue to go hand in hand. I can think of nothing more appropriate in describing the good schools accomplished than by quoting Horace Mann. Of old schools, which were School Department it is different; its purpose is to build up the sum of average intelligence. The Commonwealth is proud of her schools and none stand higher than the public schools of Newton."

Charles W. Robinson of Boston, formerly a resident of Auburndale, was the next speaker. He was a personal friend for 48 years of Charles C. Burr, the man after whom the school was named, and the honor of bestowing a name on the building was assigned to him.

President Weed of the board of aldermen made a brief historical speech and was followed by Supt. of Schools F. W. Atkinson.

Ex-Mayor Pickard spoke of the long friendship with Mr. Burr. There was singing by the children and the program ended with the singing of America by the audience.

Following the exercises in the school hall ex-mayor Pickard gave a dinner at the Woodland Park Hotel, with Gov. Bates, Congressman Powers, Mayor Weeks, President Weed, Aldermen Johnson and Brown, Judge Kennedy, Rev. C. M. Southgate, and Messrs W. A. Knowlton, W. H. Blood, W. M. Flanders, J. F. Ryder, C. W. Robinson, I. T. Burr, C. E. Hatfield, G. H. Elder, L. H. Bacon, F. W. Atkinson, Abbot Bassett, A. C. Farley, E. F. Hamlin and R. L. Brigham as his guests. The dinner was purely informal and brief remarks were made by Congressman Powers, Mayor Weeks and Mr. Flanders.

Captured at Last

John Burns, a Newton Lamplighter Arrested After an Exciting Chase Through West Newton Woods.

An exciting incident at West Newton occurred on Wednesday afternoon when John Burns arrested for assault on Miss Myra Hastings escaped from the custody of Chief Tarbox and half the police force and many citizens spent several hours looking for him.

Chief Tarbox visited the house of Michael Quinn, a lamplighter on Kensington street, West Newton about 3 in the afternoon accompanied by Miss Hastings. Burns who is in the employ of Quinn had just gone on an errand to Newtonville and the Chief followed. Burns returned home before the Chief found him and when informed that Tarbox was looking for him made a change of clothing and had just reappeared at the front door when the Chief drove up. In response to the request of the Chief, Burns stepped up to the carriage and Miss Hastings positively identified him as the man who had assaulted her a week ago. Burns was then arrested and took Miss Hastings place in the Chief's wagon. On the way to West Newton he was quiet, although he made several attempts to put his foot on the edge of the box buggy in which they were riding. When near West Newton he made a sudden spring from the carriage and the Chief followed, leaving the horse to be stopped later at West Newton. Burns immediately ran across the fields and woods with the Chief in close pursuit. Tarbox was without his revolver and Burns managed to get away after an exhausting run. The Chief then returned to headquarters and called out every available man and a close search was made of the entire district and telephone messages sent to neighboring towns.

Burns in the meantime had returned to the Kensington street house and secured his bicycle. Here he was seen by officer Burke who gave chase, assisted by a citizen. Burke was soon wounded but the citizen managed to close with the fugitive just as he ran into a vacant house on Warwick road. Burns then drew a revolver and again got away.

He was not seen again until arrested in Waltham early Thursday morning. He was subsequently taken to the West Newton station and has confessed that he was responsible for the Hastings assault. He was also identified as the man who attempted an assault on Valentine street West Newton some weeks ago.

In court Thursday morning he was held in $8000 bonds for the grand jury.

CHAPTER XXIII.

ON BOARD THE SERAPIS AGAIN.

"THE battle is on," said O'Neill, in the small boat, to Elizabeth, "and I am not there. O God, give us a little breeze!" he cried. In anticipation he swung the oars inboard, stepped the mast once more, letting the sail bang, and then resumed his place by her side.

"God is good to me," she said at last. "He will not let you be there to be killed. You have had trouble enough and have run enough risks. He wishes to keep you for me."

He shook his head.

"My place is there. My duty is on yonder deck. Would that I had returned to the ship without going up to the castle!"

"Why, then," she said reproachfully, "you would not have seen me?"

"I know," he replied, "but then I would be in my rightful place, fighting where I should be. Coventry would be honored in doing his duty. The admiral would be happy. Your marriage would take place!"

"And you," she cried, womanlike, placing him in the balance as opposed to all the rest, "would you have been happy?"

"Happiness has nothing to do with that," he answered impatiently. "It is a question of duty. I have been a fool."

"Has the fool been rewarded in accordance with his folly?" she asked him. "Nay, look at me before you reply," she cried imperiously, turning his head until his eyes looked into her own. In the face of that girl, in the limpid light of her magic glance, in that mystic night, there was but one answer to be made.

"I say no more," he replied, kissing her softly. "You are right. I have you. You are worth it all. I will try to be a philosopher about all the rest."

Meanwhile the intermittent reports had been succeeded by a steady roar of artillery which reverberated and rolled along the surface of the water. The Scarborough, some distance from the Serapis and the Richard to the northwest, was apparently hotly engaged with the Pallas, while the Serapis seemed to be sailing back and forth between the two groups of combatants, pouring in a random fire upon friend and foe alike. Great clouds of smoke, punctuated by vivid flashes of light, overhung the ships.

The feelings of the young officer can be imagined. Adrift in that little boat, watching the awful combat, not even the presence of the woman he loved could compensate him for his absence, in spite of his attempted philosophy. The fever of the conflict possessed him. His breath came hard. The sweat stood on his forehead. He prayed as never before for a breeze to take him to the fight. He murmured incoherent words which told to the tender listener something of the terrible struggle which raged within his bosom. So the long hours wore away.

Toward 11 o'clock they heard a terrific explosion, and then the roar of the battle slackened and finally died away. When the smoke drifted off the two ships were lying side by side. Farther off, almost hull down, were the Scarborough and the Pallas, which had ceased their fight some time before. The battle was over. Who had won?

But it was late, and the breeze so long wished for now sprung up once more, and the little boat gathered way and began to slip through the water again. The sky had become overcast. It grew very dark. The wind freshened steadily and finally blew so strong that it required all the skill and address of which O'Neill was possessed to keep his unsteady little craft from capsizing. Finally he was forced to drop the sail and take to the oars to keep afloat at all. About 2 o'clock in the morning a squall of rain came down, and they lost sight of the ships. Toward morning the wind moderated again, and they were enabled to set sail once more. But the ocean was covered with a dense mist. They were in the thick of it and could see nothing. As nearly as he could judge without the aid of a compass O'Neill headed the boat toward the place where they had last made out the two ships.

"We ought to pick them up in a few moments now," he said to the cowering, frightened, exhausted girl crouching down in the stern sheets in her wet, sodden garments, which clung to her shivering figure. The night had been too much for her. Her physical strength had almost given way, though nothing could abate the affection he saw shining still in her tired eyes.

"Therefore in a few moments we shall know our fate."

"How is that?" she said, rousing herself a little.

"If Commodore Jones has been captured," he answered, "I have but to give myself up and redeem Coventry, and you know the rest."

"Yes," she replied wearily and listlessly. "Let it come. We have fought a good fight, you and I. We can do no more. And the other alternative?"

"Why, in that case," he said, "we shall be there under our own flag. He, too, will be saved, and the rest of our troubles are over."

"What think you of the prospect?" she asked, brightening a little.

"It is difficult to say. The Serapis and the Scarborough should easily be more than a match for our whole squadron. The Richard is almost worthless as a fighting ship, as I said. Landais, who commands the Alliance, is insane. I can't prophesy what Cottemau will do with the Pallas. We have but one advantage—John Paul Jones himself! He alone is worth a thousand."

The light from the rising sun, assisted by the fitful wind, began to dispel the mists of the morning.

"See!" cried the girl, pointing. "There, right ahead of us! Are not those the sails of a ship? What ship?"

Wraithlike, as she pointed at a rift in the mist, and wreathed in clouds of vapor, there appeared for a second the light canvas of a great ship. Following her outstretched finger he caught a fleeting glimpse of it, but saw nothing to reassure him as to the result of the battle. The sight struck terror to his heart. Such canvas as that was never set above the decks of the Richard. As he looked the mist closed round them again. The ship had vanished.

"Ah, 'tis gone, but I am certain I saw it. Which was it?" she continued, hastily rousing herself at the prospect of decision. "Tis a ship, is it not? But which one?"

"The mist is thinning again. 'Twill clear away in a moment," he answered evasively. "We shall see more distinctly then. She was making toward us, I think." He could not bear to dash her hopes with the assurance that it was not the Richard, though he had resigned himself to death in consequence of his glimpse at once. It was useless to try to fly. The mist was rising in every direction, and before they could have gone a hundred yards they would be visible to the ship in front of them, now showing her huge bulk through the thinning clouds of vapor which enshrouded her. The next moment it rolled away. The sunlight flooded the heavens in transformation. The breeze tossed the sea into a thousand white-capped waves. It was morning. Some one on the ship saw the little boat with its two occupants at once. An officer leaped to the rail. "Boat ahoy!" rang out over the water. The great white frigate, deep sunken, as if deeply laden, was moving sluggishly through the water and was almost upon them.

"The ship!" screamed the girl wildly.

"It is the Serapis," answered O'Neill in a hollow voice.

"Ah," she said, sinking back exhausted. "After all, it is over. I shall never survive you."

"Boat ahoy, there!" again cried the officer, standing on the rail, pistol in hand. "Answer my hail or I fire! Who are you?"

"I am your prisoner, escaped last night from that ship!" cried O'Neill. "I wish to deliver myself up!"

"Come alongside, then," said the officer, turning inboard and giving a sharp command. The way of the ship was checked; she was thrown up into the wind, and as her broadside slowly swung opposite O'Neill he saw that her mainmast was gone and that she was frightfully cut up and bore evidence of having participated in a tremendous action. Away off to the northeast a little cluster of ships was seen on the horizon, too far off to distinguish them. There was no sign of the Richard that he could see. In a few seconds the boat was brought alongside the gangway. Elizabeth clambered up the ladder with his assistance, and they stepped upon the decks. A frightful scene presented itself.

Upon one side, amidsthips, dead men, half naked, covered with coagulated blood, were literally piled up in a great heap. The deck itself was covered with grime and blood, and a handful of men, most of them wounded in some way, were distributed about the ship endeavoring to effect some restoration to order. Guns here and there were dismantled; ropes cut in every direction were lying entangled in wild confusion about the life rails and masts. The broken mainmast thrust its jagged end a few feet into the air above the deck. The rest of it was gone.

Spars everywhere were shattered, and great rifts appeared in the flapping canvas. The rail and bulwarks were broken and smashed on every side. There was not a single boat left swinging at the davits. Splintered woodwork showed where numerous shots had taken effect, and charred pieces of timber on every hand added heart-breaking evidence of conflagration's devastating touch. From the depths beneath the deck came low groans and murmurs of pain, accentuated by the sharp shriek of some deeper sufferer or the delirious raving of some fevered patient. Elizabeth shrank back appalled.

"How horrible!" she murmured. "Take me away. I cannot stand it!" He caught her in his arms. A little more and she would have fainted.

"Good heavens!" he said. "In all my battles I never saw such a ship! What a frightful scene! They didn't get off without a fight," he added slowly. An officer, with head bound up in a handkerchief and his arm in a sling, was approaching them.

"Sir," said O'Neill, saluting the while, "I am the officer who escaped last night. I deliver myself up to you, why, it's Stacey!" he cried in great surprise, recognizing a brother officer of the Richard. "What do you here, man?"

"Fore gad, it's O'Neill!" cried the other. "Glad are we to see you, man. But this lady—this is no place for her."

"She goes with me," said O'Neill briefly. "But you?"

"This is where I belong."

"And they have captured you, I suppose?"

"No; the ship is ours."

"And the old Richard?" cried O'Neill.

"Abandoned and sunk after the surrender," answered the young officer. "She was cut to pieces by the Serapis' fire, but we have this ship."

"Thank God!" answered O'Neill fervently. "And Captain Jones?"

"Aft there on the quarter deck."

"Come, Elizabeth!" he cried, seizing her by the arm, and, he assisting her, they made their way with difficulty in the confusion to the quarter deck.

"Ah, O'Neill, thank God I see you alive again!" said Jones, springing forward, his face beaming. "We got there in time, then, I see."

"Yes, sir, thanks to this lady," answered O'Neill, pointing to Elizabeth. "Madam, you are fit for a sailor's bride," said the little captain.

"Tis high praise, sir, from Captain Jones, I protest," she answered, rallying herself in the relief of assured safety.

"Would God that I had been with you in this battle!" cried O'Neill gloomily.

"We missed you. I wished often for you," answered the captain. "The poor

She was kneeling by his side.

old Richard was torn to pieces under our feet. We could not stay on her longer, so we had to come here."

"And I not there! I suppose that I have forfeited everything forever for going up to the castle. Shall you break me, sir?"

"Nothing, nothing shall be done, my poor boy," answered the captain kindly. "You have been punished enough by not having been with us in the greatest battle ever fought on the sea. But it seems to me you have not entirely lost the game. You, too, have a prize in tow. How go your love affairs?" he whispered.

"Well, indeed, sir. The Lady Elizabeth is here, as you see. We are to be married at once, sir."

"You may have the chaplain of the Serapis for that purpose."

"Yes, sir. When he last officiated for me he was reading my funeral service," replied O'Neill, smiling.

"Some people would say it's much the same thing," laughed the captain; "but we know better. Ah, well, that's over now, thank God, and this lady—Madam," he said, turning to her, "I bid you welcome to a ship once before. It is a different ship now, but the welcome is just the same."

"Know you ought of Major Edward Coventry, Captain Jones?" cried Elizabeth. "This time it was she who recommended."

"Why, he lies on the deck yonder, dying. He wouldn't let me take him below. Do you know—but I forgot; he was your friend."

"Take me to him," she cried hastily, and in a moment she was kneeling by his side. They had made him as comfortable as possible with cushions and boat cloaks, but his hours were numbered. His head was thrown back, his face ghastly pale. Blood stained the linen shirt about his breast. His eyes were closed. The end was at hand.

"Poor fellow!" said O'Neill in great sorrow. "He died for me." And then he briefly recounted the circumstances of their escape to the astonished captain.

"Do you know how he was wounded, sir?" he asked.

"It was my own hand that struck the blow," answered Jones. "Would it had been otherwise! There was a moment in the action when they sprang to board. He leaped upon the rail, cutlass in hand. He was a fair and easy mark. I met them with a pike, which I buried in his bosom. He fell back smiling. I remember that I thought it strange to see him smiling at that time, even in the heat of the battle. Too bad—too bad!" he said.

"Oh, Edward," cried the girl, tears streaming down her face, "I never thought to see you thus! I never meant to bring you to this! If you could but speak to me—to say that you forgave me for it all! If I could have your blessing before—" The man stirred a little and opened his eyes. He looked about him vacantly, but consciousness began to dawn again, and with the dawn came recognition. It was the face of Elizabeth bending over him. She was the woman whom he loved. There, back of her, was O'Neill. He began to comprehend.

"Elizabeth," he murmured, "my death—not in vain—then."

"Forgive me—forgive me!" she cried brokenly. "Oh, forgive me! I did love you!"

"Yes," he said, faintly smiling, "but not like—"

He glanced at O'Neill. "You, too," he murmured. "Make—her—happy." His mind wandered a little. "Father," he cried suddenly, "don't look at me in that way! I did it because I loved her; her happiness before mine."

"Oh, doctor, can nothing be done? Is there no hope?" cried O'Neill to the attending surgeon.

"Nothing, sir. 'Twill not be long now," answered the surgeon, shaking his head.

CHAPTER XXIV.

"NOT GUILTY, MY LORD."

HERE'S a boat comin' alongside, sir," said a midshipman to Captain Jones, "Hyin' an admiral's flag."

"Ah, that will be our friend Lord Westbrooke," he said, turning toward the gangway. "Show him to me if he comes on board." Elizabeth knelt by the side of the dying man, who had sunk into silence again, and bathed his head with her handkerchief while the doctor applied some simple restorative.

In a moment the stately form of the old admiral stepped through the gangway, and he looked about him in astonishment.

"God bless me, what a fight! I knew that rebel was a desperate man, but I never imagined anything like this! Captain Pearson?" said he imperiously. "Where is he?"

"Here, my lord," said Pearson mournfully, coming out of the cabin, where he had withdrawn a little.

"I congratulate you, sir, on—" "Stop, sir!" cried the captain in great agony. "You do not understand. This ship—we were not successful."

"What?" cried the admiral. "Is not this the Serapis?"

"Aye, but she belongs—"

"To the navy of the United States, sir," said a calm voice at his elbow, which made him start. "And she is now commanded by Captain John Paul Jones, at your service. I shall be glad to supply you with a yardarm. If you have need of one, my lord—"

"Good God!" said the old man, turning to Jones. "And the Richard?"

"We sunk her, sir," answered Pearson, "but it was useless."

"You have done well, Captain Pearson," said the admiral. "Here is evidence of the fight you made. Never fear; you shall receive reward. 'Twas a defeat as noble as a capture."

"Aye," said Captain Jones. "I can bear witness to the desperate nature of the resistance. 'Twas such as I have never met before in twenty battles on the sea."

"Pearson, my—my—son!" said the admiral huskily. "How did he bear himself in the fight?"

"Well and nobly, sir, as I can testify," added Pearson.

"I, too," said Jones. "I saw him. 'Twas he who led your boarders, Captain Pearson, when they tried to sweep our decks."

"And is he well?" said the old admiral, striving to school himself into composure. "That charge, you know, Pearson. I think we need not press it now," he added.

"No, not now, nor ever, sir," said Pearson mournfully. "Compose yourself, my dear admiral; he—"

"I am a veteran," said the admiral. "I have looked death in the face for fifty years. Speak plainly. You would say that he is dead?"

"Not yet, sir," answered Jones gently.

"Where is he? Take me to him?"

"He lies aft there on the quarter deck, sir."

The little group around the dying man made way for the old admiral. He knelt down on the deck opposite Elizabeth, not heeding the others, and gazed long and earnestly in the face of the dying officer.

"The last of his line," he murmured, "and he is gone!" A single tear trickled down the weather beaten cheek and splashed upon the face of the young man. "Will he live to know me, think you?" said the admiral simply to the surgeon.

"I think so, yes," replied the physician. As if he had heard the question, Coventry opened his eyes. There was recognition in them.

"Father," he murmured faintly.

"My boy—my boy!" said the admiral, bowing his head and striving, manlike, but in vain, to conceal his emotion.

"You told me—not to see you—again. I tried to obey," said Coventry faintly. "The charge—"

"It is withdrawn; I dismiss it. You have done nobly, Captain Pearson says, and fought like a hero. You are forgiven. I commend you," said the old man, catching his other hand.

"Ah, so," said Coventry, smiling wearily. "Now I must go."

"Not yet!" cried the admiral.

"I—my lord"—said the young man, wandering again, "may I please the court—may it please the court"—He struggled for breath. "Lift me up," he said.

"'Twill be his end," said the doctor, lifting a warning finger.

"Lift me up!" cried the dying man more strongly than before. The admiral nodded. The young Irishman lifted him a little.

"Higher!" he cried. O'Neill lifted him to a sitting position.

"Not guilty, my lord," said the young man resolutely in a loud, clear voice, throwing his arms out before him and still smiling. The blood gushed from his lips, and when they laid him back his plea was heard in that higher court before which the rich and the poor must all finally appear, before

Letter to Chas. H. Hakeman

Newton Upper Falls

Dear Sir: It's an old saying: the best advertisement is a pleased customer.

It happens to us continually in this way: A man buys Devoe for his house—he has painted it once in three years for a dog—d thinks he knows what he wants—buys 30 gallons, and has 10 left.

He sees right-off that 20 Devoe is as much as 30 of anything else. He likes that; it comes quick; it is a surprise; and he tells of it. The best advertisement is a pleased customer.

Three years roll round. There isn't a sign that his house needs paint, he don't paint it. Next year he don't paint it. This comes slow; it is a surprise; but he has got used to it. Still the best advertisement is a pleased customer.

Yours truly,

F. W. Devoe & Co.,

BOARD OF ALDERMEN.

Short and Unimportant Meeting of the Board on Monday Night.

Demolition of Old Mason School Building Considered and Final Action Deferred.

The regular meeting of the board of aldermen last Monday night was called to order by President Weed and these aldermen were also present: Barber, Bowen, Carter, Chesley, H. B. Day, Ellis, Ensign, Hubbard, Hunt, Johnson, Lothrop, Mellen, Saltonstall and Sweeney.

FROM THE MAYOR.

Communications from the mayor transmitting claim of George Cully on account of the Boylston street trestle; letter from Rev. J. J. Downey, Supt. St. John's Industrial school, relative to allowance on water bill for care of destitute boys; and from A. R. Kelley for Michael Norton relative to damages for injuries received, were referred to the committee on Claims.

A communication recommending an appropriation of $2000 for preliminary expenses of abolition of grade crossings was referred to the Finance Committee.

A communication transmitting a request from the Assessors for additional office room and another letter recommending an increase in the number of assistant assessors were received and referred respectively to the Committee on Public Works and the Committee on Departments.

PETITIONS.

Petition of George Gore for damages received from defective highway was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Petitions of C. F. Danforth and of John Riley for wagon licenses were referred to the Committee on Public Franchises.

COMMITTEE REPORTS.

These reports were received:

FINANCE.—Recommending grant of $82,049 for city expenses to Oct. 15; recommending transfer of $150 from Police Dept. Maintenance of Teams to Police Dept. Water and Light; recommending $500 additional for Charity Dept., Care of Sick Poor; recommending transfer of $3,280.26, balance of Hyde Brook drain appropriation to School Dept. Fuel; recommending $2790 additional for School Dept. Fuel, and recommending transfer of $1300 from Miscellaneous Expenses to Fire Dept.

PUBLIC WORKS.—Recommending that care of certain park lands be transferred to Metropolitan Park Commission; recommending laying out of Devon road; recommending laying out of Hillsboro terrace, and (majority) recommending removal or demolition of old Mason school house.

The report of the Public Works Committee recommending that the report of the City Engineer relative to Newtonville Drain be placed on file was accepted.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS.

The election officers appointed at the last meeting of the board were then considered and unanimously confirmed, 14 ballots being cast.

ORDERS.

These orders were adopted: Authorizing transfer of care of Lower Falls and Auburndale parks to Metropolitan Park Commission; assigning hearings Oct. 5 on laying out of Devon road and of Hillsboro terrace; granting $82,049 for city expenses to Oct. 15; transferring $150 from Police Dept. Maintenance of Teams to Police Dept. Water and Light; transferring $1300 from Miscellaneous Expenses to Fire Dept. for Fuel and Salaries; appropriating $500 additional for Charity Dept. Care of Sick Poor, and appropriating $2790 additional for Fuel for School Dept.

Alderman H. B. Day questioned the wisdom of transferring the balance of the Hyde Brook drain appropriation to the School Dept. for fuel, saying he understood that there was prospect of a near settlement of the suits affecting the Hyde Brook drain matter. Alderman Lothrop said that when this appropriation was made it was with the distinct understanding that there should be no legal trouble. He did not consider the city bound to keep this appropriation available under the circumstances, but suggested that if the work was to be done there was a large balance in the regular appropriation for Drains.

Alderman Ensign stated that the Brook Fair was an old matter but he believed it was near a settlement and did not think it wise to divert the money already available.

Alderman Lothrop explained that the high cost of coal had made it necessary to provide nearly $6000 additional for the School Dept. and the order was then adopted.

OLD MASON SCHOOL.

When the order for the removal or demolition of the old Mason school building was considered, Alderman Bowen presented petitions signed by over 300 citizens of Newton Centre in aid of the same. The alderman further stated that the old building was located in the apex of the triangle containing the new building and was most unsightly. It was not practicable to remove the building and at present it was an eyesore. The land was given by Horace Cousens with the stipulation that no other building should be placed on it and Newton Centre was unanimous that it should be removed.

Alderman Johnson presented an amendment to include the old school building on Ash street, and said that Auburndale desired to be treated exactly as other sections of the city were treated. If the old school building at Newton Centre was to be torn down the one at Auburndale should also be torn down.

Alderman H. B. Day said he was not prepared to vote on the matter and believed the board was going too fast. It was a question whether the old building might not be available for the overflow from another school district and stated that the pressure for new school buildings was very great. He appreciated the value of an open space at Newton Centre, but believed it was a large question as to what was to be done with our old school buildings. He moved to table the order.

Alderman Mellen did not believe the Auburndale building should be coupled with that of Newton Centre as the circumstances might be entirely different in each case. He wished the Auburndale matter referred to the committee, and made a motion accordingly.

Alderman Saltonstall said the whole matter of the Mason building had been investigated very thoroughly during the summer and it is the opinion of the Committee that the building is not fit to be moved. Before the new school was constructed the old building had been deemed improper for school purposes and if it was to be retained for future school use it would not improve. As it now stands the building is a blot on the landscape and he believed it was poor public policy to allow these old buildings to remain.

Alderman Mellen thought the best way out of a parliamentary difficulty was to recommit the entire matter to the Public Works Committee, but Alderman Johnson withdrew his amendment and the original order was then recommitted. An order offered by Alderman Johnson to require the removal or demolition of the Ash street building was then referred to the Public Works Committee.

And at 8.41 the board adjourned.

Piano Economy.

The little extra which an Ivers & Pond may cost over an indifferent or merely good piano is the best part of the investment, and will pay rich dividends during the life of the instrument.

Nearly 300 American educational institutions, shrewd judges of piano value, intelligently economical always, have purchased for their own use Ivers & Pond pianos. A single one of these, the New England Conservatory of Boston has alone purchased 299 Ivers and Pond Pianos in the last twenty years.

Besides being large manufacturers the Ivers & Pond Piano Co. are extensive handlers of pianos of all grades, new and used. Thus, whether a $50, square or a $1000 upright be desired they are in a position to supply it. Prospective purchasers will do well to write for their catalogue and list of bargains in slightly used pianos, as well as explanation of their rental purchase plan practically buying a piano by renting it. All this information may be had free by addressing Ivers & Pond Piano Co., 114 Boylston street, Boston.

The members of Company C, 5th Regiment, M. V. M., which took regimental honors during camp at Duxbury, have been instructed that they will take part in the big parade in honor of the Honorable Artillery Company of London, next month in Boston.

Washington Letter.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 21, 1903.

There is some anxiety among timorous people in Washington because of the action of the American Federation of Labor, taken in connection with the W. A. Miller case and the President's declared "open door" policy with regard to union and non-union labor, in the Government service. The Central Labor Union of the District of Columbia has sent to every organization affiliated with the Federation a copy of resolutions requesting the President to dismiss Miller and retract his avowed policy with regard to union and non-union labor. It is seen that this is the first step in an organized opposition to President Roosevelt's nomination. There are, it is claimed, 250,000 members of the federated labor organizations and the results of an organized opposition if it could throw this vote in block would doubtless prove formidable.

The idea that the President will for a moment consider the possibility of receding from the stand he has taken is not entertained by those who know him and who can view his actions, in so far as they relate to union labor, from a dispassionate standpoint. Mr. Roosevelt is firmly convinced that he is in the right in his "open door" declaration and it would appear that this fact should have appealed to the labor organizations. It is pointed out that in working for the government laborers are under no necessity of organizing to protect themselves or to secure shorter hours or larger wages, whatever may be the conditions that confront them when working for individuals or corporations. The government always pays liberally and is an easy task master. It is, therefore, obvious that the unions would be wiser to accept the dictum of the President rather than to antagonize him.

In the case of Miller, it is stated on excellent authority that strong recommendations have gone to the President that he be dismissed, these recommendations being based on facts other than that he has been expelled from the bookbinders' union, and that patience on the part of the unions would probably be rewarded with the discharge of their old enemy. In view of the action of the Central Labor Union, however, the discharge of Miller might now be ascribed to fear on the part of the President and there is nothing that would prove more repugnant to him than to be called upon to take action which might be so interpreted. It is claimed that already ten states have been heard from endorsing the resolutions of disapproval of the President's course.

A remarkable record of effectual target shooting with large guns has just been made by the crew of the Indiana, at a range of from 1,400 to 1,600 yards. With the 6 inch guns an average of 75 per cent. of hits was made, while the rate of firing was unusually fast and the vessel from which the guns were fired was kept going at full speed. In view of the 8 inch guns a record score of 87.5 per cent. of this was made, the firing being at a rapid rate. The last four shots fired with the 8 inch guns all made a bull's eye, notwithstanding the fact that the bull's eye is only 50 inches square. When the last bull's eye was made the men became so enthusiastic that when the gun pointer emerged from the turret he was seized by the men and despite his struggles to get away, was carried up to the bridge where he was presented to the Captain and all the officers and umpires shook hands with him.

The President will return to Washington on September 29 and the newspaper correspondents, at least, are rejoicing that for another long period Washington as a news center will not have to divide honors with Oyster Bay. With the return of the President members of Congress and politicians generally will flock to this city and affairs will resume their customary liveliness.

CONTINUOUS ADVERTISING.

JUST AS IMPORTANT AS KEEPING THE STORE OPEN.

There are two ways of looking at advertising, both of them right. Advertising should be done during the dull time for the purpose of stirring up trade at that time and also for the sake of the benefit which will come from being continually before the public eye.

A man should just as quickly think of stopping his advertisements in the summer or in the dull time after the holidays as he should think of closing up his store several months in the year and keeping it open only when trade would keep him busy.

It does not take people very long to forget things, and if a store be closed up four months or the advertising stopped four months a great many people would have forgotten that the business was in existence. The other view of advertising is that it ought to be pushed during the busy time, when the people are ready to buy.

Advertising cannot be expected to sell goods when people don't want them, and it will be naturally most effective when it gives publicity to some desirable article at just the right time. To be sure, advertising will sell anything at any time if the price be made low enough and the advertisement sufficiently attractive. Some lines of goods can be forced, but even those which cannot be forced should not be allowed to drop out of sight.

Keep up your advertising during the summer, and you will not only get your goods sold, but your summer trade will also show a fine increase.—Chicago (Mich.) News.

Fatal Accident

Archibald McClellan, two years old, was knocked down and instantly killed by a horse last Friday afternoon.

The accident happened at West and Middle streets, within a stone's throw of the child's home. Two boys, Thomas Flannery, 16 years old, and Daniel Kelly, 12 years, who had charge of the horse, were later locked up by the police on a charge of manslaughter. They were arraigned in Newton court Saturday morning.

About 5 o'clock a driver employed by the Boston Branch Grocery Company of Watertown started out to make a few deliveries in Nonantum. Flannery and Kelly accompanied him, and when he jumped off to enter a house on Middle street they were left in charge.

Knowing that an order was to be delivered further down the street, they started along toward the house. On the way, it is said, some boys threw apples at the wagon. Flannery and Kelly returned the fire with a shower of charcoal. In the midst of it the horse took fright and got beyond their control.

At an unlucky moment the McClellan child started to toddle across the street and fell under the horse, the heavy iron-shod hoofs crushing his head like an eggshell. The little fellow was dead when he was picked up as the wagon clattered by. The horse was finally stopped and later the boys were arrested. Both belong in Watertown, Flannery at 24 Morse street, and Kelly at 9 Morse street.

Letter to John W. Weeks,

West Newton. Dear Sir: Messrs. Leachman & Edelin, Grafton, W. Va., had been selling a paint, which they thought well of; and this had occurred. They had sold a customer 18 gallons of it to paint his house. A few years later, they sold the same man Devoc lead-and-zinc the same number of gallons, to paint the same house. He had 7 gallons left.

The point of the tale is: 11 gallons Devoc paints an 18 gallon house. Of course, that isn't all.

Why does 11 gallons Devoc go as far as 18 gallons of other paint? Because it is all paint, all true, no sham, and full measure.

But that isn't all. Devoc lasts longer. No, no; you haven't got to wait ten years to find that out. Ten thousand people know it. We've got their names. Our agents know them; they think a heap of Devoc. There's no difficulty in showing your townspeople what to expect of Devoc. $10 will paint a $15 house; and the paint'll last twice as long.

Yours truly,

F. W. Devoc & Co.,

New York.

Vacation Notes

Dear Graphic:

My recent letter was regarding my trip to Baltimore, Washington and Virginia and now let me continue with an account of my homeward journey. From Virginia, I returned to Washington and went on to Philadelphia. The Quaker city has numerous points of interest for the visitor, mainly Independence Hall, with the famous Liberty Bell, and many oil portraits of men whose patriotic efforts in war and peace did so much toward making our great nation what it is today. The clear cut benevolent face of Washington looks out from several frames, also Lafayette, and the various signers of the Declaration of Independence.

The City Hall, Wanamaker's store, United States Mint, Gerard College and Fairmont Park, are all worthy the time it takes to visit them. A fast train across the State of New Jersey, takes one in an hour's time, to Atlantic City, one of the popular resorts on the Atlantic coast. The beach, is one of the finest and when I was there the hotels were crowded with guests from all over the country. The broad walk extends for over four miles with a magnificent stretch of sand on the ocean side and hundreds of shops of every kind and description on the other side. Several piers run out into deep water and on these are theatres, entertainment halls and restaurants. While in New York I visited Coney Island where entertainment can be found for all sorts and conditions of men and every kind of taste. I decided to return home by a round-about route so left one morning by train for Albany, where I spent the rest of the day with Mr. Philip Robinson, a former well known resident of Newton, in visiting the handsome Capital building, the park and the business and residential portions. Late the same evening I took the train again for Clayton, where connection was made with the boat for the Thousand Islands and Montreal. The passage through the islands occupies several hours and the course is between Howe and Wolfe Islands, past Grindstone Island and Round Island, where is located the Frontenac, and Thousand Islands park and yacht club.

The characteristics island scenery to Alexandria Bay is very attractive, the course being of a zig zag nature, and in places is extremely narrow. Many fine hotels and beautiful residences are on either side and after going by Brockville, named after Gen. Brock the hero of Queenston Heights, a stop was made at Prescott, a little farther on the Galop, the first of the troubled waters of the St. Lawrence, was passed safely and was soon followed by the Long Sault rapids, extending some nine miles down stream to Cornwall. The shooting of the rapids, as the descent by boat is called, is a most exciting experience and one can feel this downward motion similar to that in an elevator. Other rapids are the Coteau, Cedar, Split Rock and Cascade, and below the latter the river expands into Lake St. Louis. This is the summer home of many Montreal residents, who can enjoy the combined attractions of the Chateaugay hill, the dim outline of Mount Royal and the fine yachting and fishing. The marvellous Lachine rapids are beyond when the boat rocks like a cradle and the spray dashes over the deck. Nine miles farther on is Montreal, a place associated with La Salle who, about the year 1870, obtained a grant from the Seminary of Montreal and formed a settlement. The city has a population of 350,000, is on a hill, and is rich in historical associations, is the commercial metropolis of the Dominion, owing to its position at the head of ocean navigation and still retains many traces of French and English occupation. Mentioned briefly the points of interest are the church of Notre Dame, with its fine twin towers, beautiful interior and paintings and enormous bell weighing 24,780 pounds. St. James' cathedral, the Bonsecours Market, Victoria Jubilee bridge, government building, McGill College, Dominion Square, Victoria Square, Mount Royal with its incline, railway and observatory, the various mounts and churches too numerous to mention. A trip in the "Seeing Montreal" cars gives an excellent idea of the city and locates many places to be examined more closely later on. From here I took the boat of the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company and a night's trip brought me to Quebec, antique, quaint and curious and now considered the granary of the world. Founded by Samuel de Champlain in 1608, its nearly three centuries of existence has given this fortress city a history rich in material for the philosopher and the poet. The winding streets amid frowning battlements lend an atmosphere of the dim past before civilization had made much progress and barbaric wildness predominated. From Dufferin Terrace, or from the citadel, still higher the picture spread out would be hard to duplicate and it is no wonder that Quebec is called the Gibraltar of America. The population is 80,000 and I was informed that about eighty per cent are French, many of them not being able to speak a word of English. Its position is on a high and narrow promontory and to the height of 300 feet. The old part is called the lower town and the part above the upper town. This latter is more modern and here is located the Chateau Frontenac, parliament buildings, St. Louis gate, Plains of Abraham and Wolfe's monument, the Basilica, Notre Dame church, Kent house, where the late Queen Victoria's father lived, joint monument to Wolfe and Montcalm and the Martello towers. The Calèche, a two wheeled vehicle of quaint construction is used much by visitors in seeing the city and the drivers point out all historical points. The falls of Montmorency, seven miles from the city, are 100 feet higher than Niagara and in their fall are much broken up, causing the water to be churned into a mass of white foam. At the top of the cliff is the old Hall Manor house, where the Duke of Kent made his summer residence. Fifteen miles farther on is the famous shrine of Saint Anne de Beaupre, where over 155,000 pilgrims annually pay their devotions. It is noted for its wonderful cures and miracles, and pyramids of crutches left behind by those cured by the saint rise up on each side of the entrance to the church. The building is 200 feet long, 105 feet broad, 56 feet high and has a number of lateral chapels and a large sacristy. It is of Corinthian architecture and between its twin towers, which are 168 feet high, is a colossal statue of Saint Anne rising 14 feet from its base.

The paintings on the walls are numerous and beautiful and the chancel and altar are most imposing. The little town is primitive and many of the women wear wooden shoes and the simple Norman costume. Quebec is the starting point of the steamers going down the Saint Lawrence and up the Saguenay river and I found the two days' trip most enjoyable. The principal stopping points are St. Paul, St. Irenée, Murray Bay and Tadoussac on the Saint Lawrence river and the Ha Ha Bay and Chicoutimi on the Saguenay. These are all small villages where the principal industry is pulp manufacturing and are exceedingly primitive. Several summer hotels are located along the shores and a number of Montreal and Quebec families have homes here where they spend the heated term. The shores along the river are beautiful with their sloping sides clothed with a thick growth of evergreen varying in hue from the lighter color of the cedars to that of the deep, dark shaded pines. The water of the Saguenay river is dark almost to blackness, and the deep shadows from the frowning cliffs on either side intensifies the effect. At every turn of the winding stream some new and unexpected beauty meets the eye; sometimes it is projecting rock and sheltered cove and at others fir crowned cliff and open bay, each lending a charm to the scene. After St. Alphonse, settlement ceases and then, at every mile, the great river grows more solemn until the climax is reached at Capes Trinity and Eternity, which form the gateway to Ha Ha Bay and are about 2,000 feet in height. Trinity is more northerly of the two, and while one mountain, it has three elevations, as seen from the river, hence its name.

On the second elevation is a large white statue of the Virgin Mary, which looms up for a considerable distance. The boat goes within twenty feet of the cliff and is the dividing point of a distance of 4,000 feet of rock one half extending in the air toward heaven the other under the water in the direction of the earth's center. The return back to Quebec was by night and from there I went on to Montreal and home by the way of Vermont and the White Mountains. My trip had been a successful one, the weather had been perfect and the knowledge gained from sight seeing I consider of great value.

Wall St. has become dependent entirely upon the weather. The course of the market is determined by the temperature in the corn belt, and this condition will last until the crop matures. Low temperature and frosts will mean drooping prices; while good growing weather will mean buoyancy and strength. It is now generally agreed that the crop will be out of danger by another week. The growth has progressed so far that a crop of at least 2,000,000,000 bushels is assured, even if 250,000,000 bushels are lost through inclement weather. This would compare with 52,000,000 bushels last year, and 1,500,000,000 bushels in 1901. It will be remembered in the year following the crop failure of 1901, all the granger roads increased their earnings greatly by means of a larger merchandise tonnage. This year, even if the crop turns out only fairly well, they will have all the business they can handle.

While therefore, the market may be temporarily affected by unfavorable crop news, the final results will be entirely satisfactory, and prices of good stocks should advance from this level. Purchases made on the breaks in the next few days should prove highly profitable after the corn is harvested.

Dates to Remember.

September 29, 30, October 1 and 2, the dates of the big Brockton Fair and Horse Show. The Horse Show this year will include many new features. High jumping will be one of them. Heatherbloom, the world's champion jumper, with a record of seven feet six and one-half inches, will meet all comers. The hunting class will also furnish an interesting feature. Mr. F. M. Ware will again be in charge and will have much more space than in past years to conduct all the events. Mr. Charles F. Baker of Boston has donated a beautiful challenge cup valued at $250 for the best horse suitable for a rig. The show will include 80 classes and liberal purses are offered in each class. This is only one of the many attractions of this big show. Trot and pacing races for purses amounting to $1000; a stage show of high class artists, firemen's muster, balloon ascensions, athletic events, foot ball, basket ball, a hippodrome; and besides all these a mammoth hall exhibit of mechanical and art displays and a regular old time "cattle show" with cows, pigs, sheep and goats, to say nothing of the poultry and the display of pumpkins and all garden "sass." The growth from the old to the new can be interestingly traced at this big Brockton Carnival that includes everything. If its new, you'll see it at Brockton.

A Valued Souvenir

Col. A. M. Ferris of Washington street has recently received a present of a saddle and bridle from Gen'l. Dudley, accompanied by the following interesting letter:—

Copy.
Roxbury, Mass., 206 Dudley St., Sept. 10th, 1903.

My Dear Colonel.

I send you per express to Newton, my war saddle and bridle that I used all through the rebellion, on "Old Charley."

I do not know that you will care for them.

I am getting along in years, almost eighty, and cannot reasonably expect to be here very long.

I know of no old companion, who served under my command and that I prefer to give them to yourself.

If it could speak I am sure it could tell a most interesting tale of battles, marches, skirmishes and hardships, of some most delightful campaigns, as well as some that were not so enjoyable.

I used them both up to the date of my retirement through full thirty years of Indian campaigning. Accept them my dear old friend, and comrades as a souvenir of the days when we served together in that great strife to save the Union of these United States.

Tell the son and the grandson, their history. "How you followed "Old Charley," who so gracefully wore them and safely carried his rider. They may care for them after you are gone.

With best wishes, God bless you my boy.

Ever your friend,
N. A. M. Dudley,
Col. and Brf. Brig. Gen. U. S. A.

Chauncy Hall School.

This famous old school opens its 76th year on Sept. 28. Notwithstanding all the changes in methods and subjects that educational progress has evolved, it has remained a factor in the institutional life of Boston for three quarters of a century. With a single exception, all its staff are college bred men and women, and the last catalogue shows that over one hundred pupils have left it for higher institutions within six years. We are surprised at the number of pupils residing in Newton as shown by the same booklet.

shops, which you do not receive at the department stores. Every patron of Miss Caroline receives the proper attention, and each hat and bonnet is perfectly fitted and adapted before it leaves her parlors.

She makes a study of the figure, general contour, and the complexion, color of the hair and eyes, and even the temperament of the person is taken into consideration when making to order. Her patrons are of the best class, and you do not come in contact with, and you are free from the gaze of others while having your millinery adapted.

Although she journeys to Europe regularly for the newest idea and for models for the refined, her prices are reasonable. Her rooms are nicely situated, just off the ground floor, which makes them the more exclusive and are located in the block of the Brunswick Hotel, opposite the Institute of Technology, on Boylston street, Boston. Her opening will be held after September twenty-sixth.

THE WADE SCHOOL

The people of Upper Falls are agitating the purchase of additional land on High street in order to give room for the main entrance to the new school house from that direction. The matter will involve not only the purchase of the necessary land, but will add considerably to the cost of the building as at present planned and will entail expense in removing a ledge which will be in the way of the building.

The idea of facing this building to the south is chiefly sentimental. It cannot be seen coming from the east on account of the post office block;
he approach from the west is around a very sharp curve, and the grade of Elliot street is so much lower on the south that it cannot be seen from that street. This leaves only the view from the immediate front on High street and in our opinion the change would be a case of extravagance, pure and simple.

The agitation over junk dealers which is just now centering in Nonantum calls attention to a subject which has been receiving more or less quiet consideration for some time.

The policy of the board of aldermen for the past few years to limit the licenses to residents of the city has brought into Newton quite a number of persons who were attracted solely by the possibility of obtaining such a license. As the junk business is passing into the hands of the Russian Jews, whose habits of living and lack of cleanliness do not tend to make them desirable neighbors, it is a question whether it is not wise to still further limit the eligibility for such a license. The nature of the business affords opportunities for petty thieving and for disposing of stolen goods, and it is not always desirable for women to deal with the present kind of license holders.

We believe that the license to collect junk should be limited to not over seven and that the character of the licensee should be given careful consideration.

The disposition of old school buildings which have been superseded by modern structures is a serious problem, especially where the old building has been abandoned, on account of conditions which affect the health of the children.

At the same time it is possible for the city to oftentimes utilize these buildings for other than school purposes, and where this is even remotely possible, it should be done.

This is the situation in both Newton Centre and Auburndale. The old buildings will probably not be needed for strictly school purposes for many years, but it is possible to use them for ward rooms, elections, and the like. In any event, as one gentleman terse put it, when discussing the situation, "You may be able to use them if they are allowed to remain, but cannot do so if they are pulled down."

Death of Mrs. Lovejoy

Mrs. Matilda Domett Lovejoy whose death occurred last week, was born in Boston, November 22nd, 1821. Her parents were George and Harriet Domett, both of Boston.

Her eighty-one years covered a period of great change and progress, all of which she followed with intelligent application and to the last retained a keen interest in general affairs.

Gifted with an excellent memory and ready expression, her reminis-cences of Emerson, Holmes, Margaret Fuller and other distinguished people with whom she had been more or less closely associated in youth often made an hour with her a privilege to be valued and remembered.

Her contemporaries had all passed on, but though she lived much in the past, her interest and faith in the present generation never failed.

Her quick sympathy and gentle courage won the love of old and young and one friend has said of her, her sweet face to look upon was a benediction.

Two daughters survive her.
The funeral services were held Saturday at her late residence, 62 Langdon avenue, Watertown, Rev. Edward A. Horton of Boston officiated and the interment was at West Au-dover.

Here is an extract from a journal of the year 1609: On arriving in London we heard a great ringing of bells in almost all the churches going on very late in the evening. We were informed that the young people do that for the sake of exercise and amusement, and sometimes they pay considerable sums as a wager who will pull a bell the longest and ring it in the most approved fashion. Parishes spend much money in harmoniously sounding bells, that one being preferred which has the best bells. The old queen is said to have been pleased very much by this exercise, considering it as a sign of the health of the people. They do not ring the bells for the dead. When a person lies in agony the bells of the parish he belongs to are touched with the clippers until he either dies or recovers again. As soon as this sign is given everybody in the street as well as in the houses falls on his knees offering prayer for the sick person.

Suicides on "Blue Monday."
A scientist who has made a study of suicides has discovered that more women commit suicide on Monday than on any other day of the week.

Monday, "Blue Monday" as it has long been called, is one of the most trying days of the week for women who are housewives, principally because it is "wash day." Breakfast is usually served earlier than on other days and more hastily prepared. The children are early hurried off to school and dinner is often "piled up." "Blue Monday" is the one day in the week when a housewife's troubles, hard work and annoyances seem to come all at once; hence the significant name for the first working day of the week.

Caricatures of Plants.

Times at which different plants open and shut their petals have been investigated, and it is commonly found that the hour varies according to the amount of moisture in the air. The main thing is to protect the pollen from intruding moisture, and since some plants, such as the plumpkin, promptly close their petals on the near approach of rain they serve as weather glasses.

Some plants seem to believe in a short day's work, the plumpkin, for instance, opening at 8 in the morning and closing at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, the goat's beard, on the other hand, doing business from 3 a. m. to 10 p. m.

English as She Is Punctuated.
In a recent number of the British Medical Journal the troublesome comma is responsible for the following wonderful animal story:

"The driver having finished milking, his cow offered to take me into an adjoining room where the milk was cooled, saying that while he fetched the manager I could have a look around."

He Startled Her.
"Some women," he said, "have very little sense of rhythmic time in their heads. Are you good at keeping step, Miss Gushielgh?"

"Oh, Mr. Grubbins," she cried, "this is so sudden!"
For of course all she knew about keeping step was confined to the wedding march.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Chief of Volunteer Firemen—Well,

Independence That Counts.
After all, it is the independence that counts rather than either the wealth or the poverty. The simplicity of standing for just what one is, without shum or pretense, lifts a burden of fret or anxiety and leaves the spirit free.—Wellspring.

Leander Bennett, aged 28, of 90 Dalby street, Nonantum, was arrested by patrolman Davis of division 2 Sunday afternoon on a warrant charging him with breaking and entering the store of Alfred Boudrot on Dalby street. According to the police, Bennett visited the store shortly after 5 and attempted to force entrance by breaking in a front window.

In the municipal court Monday he pleaded not guilty, and told the court that he was on his way home and was intoxicated. While passing the store, he asserts, he fell against the window and broke it. Probable cause was found and he was held for the grand jury.

Because of his pugilistic tendencies on Saturday night, when it was claimed he attacked Conductor Temple of the Boston and Albany railroad, Fred G. Linn of Newton Highlands was fined $30 for assault and battery.

It appeared from the evidence that Linn was a passenger on a late outward-bound train Saturday night, and refused to pay his fare. When Temple tried to eject him it is alleged that he struck the conductor.

Antonio Perrell and Joseph Shields, of Boston, paid $15 and $10 respectively, in court Monday morning for stealing fruit on Sunday afternoon.

Arthur F. Swan is said to be the young man, who on Sept. 1 assisted Mrs. Hannah M. Henry and her daughter to enter their house at 85 Homer street, Newton Centre. He is now suspected of being one of the burglars, who the next night broke into her house and carried away $150 worth of silverware.

Swan is in custody, being one of a trio of burglars arrested by the Boston police on Saturday last. Certain silverware in the possession of the three is said to be the property of Mrs. Henry.

Arthur F. Swan, Lewis T. Summers and Lester Berry were brought into court Tuesday morning, from the Charles street jail, pleaded guilty to a charge of breaking and entering and were held under bonds of $1500 each for the grand jury.

Newton Sidewalks

Editor Newton Graphic:

I trust the timely appeal sent out from the mayor's office the past week may meet with practical approval at the hands of our citizens. I might say also at the feet of our citizens. For it is strange what an unholy delight it appears to give many people to trample on the grass edges of our sidewalks, making in some cases, no blade of grass to grow where not too many blades grew before.

For years I have waged an unequal battle with milk-men, grocers and various "candlestick-makers," trying to convince them that the edges of my sidewalk were not designed for the wheels of their vehicles. If our good mayor can succeed in making it a finable offense to deface what both city and private individuals labor to make beautiful, I am sure the result will be to his lasting honor and to the satisfaction of all who enjoy our fine streets.

Let us all, parents, teachers and tax payers, do our best to inspire the young and old to look for beauty and to treat with consideration whatever tends to make our surroundings attractive to lovers of the beautiful.

Literary Notes.

The FOUR TRACK NEWS for October opens with a beautifully written article entitled "A Woodland Epic," from the pen of Mary Clark Barnes, descriptive of the charms of the North Woods of the Adirondacks; "Crater Lake National Park," one of the most wonderful of Nature's fairy-lands, is described by Dennis H. Stovall; Joel Benton, under the heading of "A Region of Reminiscence," tells the literary story of Cornwall on Hudson; "Forty Acres of Fallow," by W. C. McCarty, describes the exhibit which the Philippines will make at the St. Louis Exposition; "The Era of Stage Coaches," is an intensely interesting article, by W. S. Dunbar, illustrated by reproductions of old prints; "The Patient Burro," by Thomas H. Davies, is a very unique little story of that interesting animal, fully illustrated. Other articles of especial interest are "An Auto in the Tropics," "The Country of the Future," "Hopi Masks and Dolls," "In the Catskill Orchards," "Japanese Paper Workers," "Old Fort Ross," "Where the Battles Were Fought," "Across Sahara's Sands," "The Sequoia," "Zurich," "Sam's Point," "A Californian Landmark," and "Indian Legends of the Hudson." The poetical contributions are from such well known poets as Aloysius Coll, Roy Farrell Greene, Wood, Anna Mathewson and others. There are five "Little Histories," the usual departments and a goodly sprinkling of wise and witty briefs. The illustrations are up to the usual high standard, including many beautiful full page half-tones. All in all the October issue is one of the best yet published. The FOUR TRACK NEWS is fifty cents a year, or five cents a copy, and can be had of George H. Daniels, Publisher, 7 East 42d Street, New York.

The opening of the DeMerritt school 30 Huntington avenue, Boston, on Monday next, will find the school with largely increased numbers. Several boys from Newton and Brookline availed themselves of the advantages of this school during the past year, and all speak highly of the attention they received, the progress made and by Mr. DeMerritt's hearty interest in the success of every boy who comes under his charge. Several more boys from the same vicinity have already enrolled their names for the coming year.

A Record in Name Signing.

Lucius Chittenden claimed the record for signing his name as a government employee. It was in 1802, while he was registrar of the treasury. A bond issue of $10,000,000 was made necessary by the efforts of our minister to England, Charles Francis Adams, to prevent the delivery of two ships building in England to the Confederates. The bond issue was necessary to furnish security against damages if the case should go against the United States in the English courts. Chittenden was notified at noon Friday to get the bond issue out, and he did so in time to have the bonds taken to New York by special train at 4 o'clock on the following Monday. Not three years ago he prepared a magazine article in which he claims to have signed his name 3,700 times in seven hours at that time, and to have reached a speed of ten signatures a minute. In all he signed his name 12,500 times in the period given, and had to have the aid of an army surgeon to care for his arm after the first twelve hours. He did not stop to eat, but took food in liquid form, he says, and slept at his desk.—Washington Post.

A Nice Little Task.

An expert mathematician once set himself the nice little task of calculating the number of different ways in which fifty-two cards of a pack can be distributed among four players, thirteen to each, taking every possible combination and permutation.

It would be no use to present the answer here in a long row of figures, for no one can realize to himself what such a numerical array really conveys, nor would it be much better to play with the words billions and trillions, seeing that these are mere words and nothing more to most of us, but the following illustration is more likely to be appreciated by the ordinary reader:

If the entire population of the earth were to deal the cards incessantly day and night for 100,000,000 years, at the rate of a deal by each person a minute, they would not have exhausted the one hundred-thousandth part of the number of essentially different ways in which the cards can be so distributed.

Which Was the Guilty One?

Shortly before Major J. B. Pond, the "lecture bureau expert," was taken with what proved to be his last illness he was entertaining three friends in his office at the Everett House when one of them, in commenting upon the major's book, "The Eccentricities of Genius," asked:

"Major, you have at one time and another known all the celebrities. Tell me, what sort of comparison would you make between Talmage and Mark Twain?"

"That is rather a difficult question to answer," replied the major, with a mischievous twinkle in his eyes. "But if you will promise not to ask me to elucidate I'll say this: 'One of them lied only when he had to, and the other lied whether he had to or not.'"

Breaking in a New Pipe.

"Notice that chap in a brown hat?" said a man to his companion in a walk. "Trying to break in a new pipe; trying to smoke it the first time, and fill it to the muzzle. He'll never in all his life—or as long as he owns that pipe—enjoy it!"

"Oh, won't he?"
"Never; only one way to break in a new pipe. Put in a pinch of the weed at first and smoke it all; another pinch, only larger than the first; smoke it all out; clean the pipe; gradually you can fill the pipe to the muzzle, and finally be able to smoke her all out clean as a whistle."

Parliamentary "Popping."

A member of congress had been paying attention to a young lady for a long while and had taken her to attend the house until she was well posted in the rules. On the last day of the session as they came out he bought her a bouquet of flowers and said to her, "May I offer you my handful of flowers?" She replied promptly, "I move to amend by omitting all after the word 'hand.' He blushing accepted the amendment and they adopted it unanimously.

A Personal Matter.

"I think I am giving general satisfaction," said the young clergyman a little doubtfully, "although Elder Wilkins has found a good deal of fault with my prayers."

"You are sure to have that trouble," responded the retired pastor with a reminiscent sigh. "The elder is a good man, a most worthy man, but he never can remember that he is not the party addressed in prayer."—Exchange.

As Practical as Usual.

Poor Man—Well, did you buy that book telling all about how to economize in the kitchen?

Wife—Yes, I've got it.

Poor Man—That's good. What does it say?

Wife—It's full of recipes telling how to utilize cold roast turkey, but we haven't the turkey.

Real Reform.

"My husband doesn't gamble now as he used to."

"Reformed, has he?"

"Yes; he doesn't go to the race track at all any more. His worst dissipation now is swimming. I think. At any rate, he says he only goes to the pool rooms."—Philadelphia Press.

Turtles Are Slow.

"Here!" called the impatient guest. The obsequious waiter came to his side, says Judge.

"Seems to me that soup I ordered is a long time getting to me."

"Yes, sir; but you must remember, sir, that you ordered turtle soup."

The trouble with most actors is that they have never played a part in real life.—Life.

THE PLAYHOUSE.

Keith's Theatre.—Coming to Keith's the week of September 28 are the following well-known entertainers, many of them new to the vaudeville stage of Boston, while the balance have not appeared locally for some time: Edwin Stevens, the noted comedian, who is willing away a few weeks in the varieties prior to launching on a starring tour, who will be heard in an attractive monologue, with songs; Thomas J. Ryan and Mary Richfield, in the screamingly funny farce, "Mag Haggerty's Father;" Banks and Winona Winter, in a comedy and singing sketch, "The Disappointed Romeo," introducing tenor solos by Mr. Winter and clever imitations of other stage celebrities by his talented daughter; Earl and Wilson, comedy instrumentalists; the DeMaha, eccentric and whirlwind dancers; Lew Simmons and Frank White, in a funny blackface sketch; Cara Killani, a talented vocalist and Charles Millard, just over from Europe, who is said to be a wonderful whistler. The marvelous series of motion photographs, depicting scenes in "Fairyland," will be continued a second week.

Grand Opera House—"For Her Children's Sake," from the pen of Theodore Kremer and under the management of Sullivan, Harris and Woods, will be the attraction at the Grand Opera House next week. This strong play, which is a companion piece to the celebrated "The Fatal Wedding," met with instant favor here last season, and the announcement that its return will be a welcome one to the patrons of this theatre. The story is spirited and the interest is very human and absorbing, never flagging from the start, and the spectator goes away from the theatre pleased with his surroundings. Too much cannot be said in praise of the generous and lavish manner of staging the production, and for the company engaged to present the piece. The usual Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday matinees will be given during the engagement of this attraction.

Globe Theatre.—The Globe theatre on Washington and Beach streets, Boston, has quickly taken its place as one of New England's most fashionable playhouses. Since its opening on the night of Sept. 14th, it has been filled at each performance with members of the most exclusive society of Boston and vicinity who have greatly enjoyed the performance of "John Ermine of the Yellowstone," as given by that remarkably successful and popular star, James K. Hackett and his company. Since the opening night, in deference to the desire for a happy ending, very important changes have been made, so that "John Ermine of the Yellowstone" as it now stands is one of the great dramatic successes of the country.

Miss Henrietta Crossman, one of the most popular comedienne now before the public, is to be seen as Rosalind, in "As You Like It" at the Globe theatre, for one week beginning October 5th. The production will be in every way identical with that so successfully given a few weeks ago at the Manhattan Theatre, New York.

Majestic Theatre.—"Girls Will Be Girls" is nearing its end at the Majestic theatre and next week's performances will be the last of this most pleasing entertainment, the engagement positively ending on Saturday evening, October 3. Nothing in the musical farce line that has been presented in Boston in recent years has made so favorable an impression as this delightful musical absurdity, and it will be with genuine feelings of regret that Boston theatregoers will witness its departure from this city. The show has been steadily improved since the opening performance, and the closing week of the show in Boston will be made a gala event by the different members of the company. The attraction booked to follow "Girls Will Be Girls" is Kirk LaShelle's magnificent production of the dramatization of Owen Wister's celebrated novel, "The Virginian," which will begin a limited engagement at the Majestic on Monday evening, Oct. 5.

FLORA ZABELLE in "THE YANKEE CONSUL,"
At the Tremont Theatre.

Boston.—Sweet as the odor of new-mown hay "Quincy Adams Sawyer," that best of all New England plays, will have an old home week at the Boston theatre commencing next Monday. It was in this city and at this theatre that "Quincy Adams Sawyer" first gained recognition as one of the most successful of rural dramas and every visit has only served to strengthen the splendid impression it made at first. While not lacking in pathetic touches, the play is brimming full of fun and in some of the acts the laughter is almost incessant.

Patrons will doubtless recall that during the engagement last season and the season before the success of this attraction was such that it was necessary to secure seats in advance in order to see the play without standing up. Night after night when "Quincy Adams Sawyer" was here last year hundreds were turned away from the box office because the seats had all been sold some time before the commencement of the evening performance and those who are planning to witness the play this time will do well to secure their seats as early as possible during the coming week. They are now on sale.

Miss Alice F. Peirce has returned from her summer vacation, and will reside at 29 Vernon street, Newton, for the winter. She announces the removal of her music studio, from Elliot block, Newton, to Room 503, Huntington Chambers, Boston, where she will resume her teaching on October 1st.

Hub Theatre.—Characters are a strong feature in "New York Day by Day," the melodramatic attraction which comes to the Hub theatre, opening with a bargain coupon matinee on Monday afternoon of next week.

Not only are the characters true types, but the scenery depicts with equal fidelity many notable localities in the metropolis. The story of the play is simple, direct, and appeals to every heart by its pathos and truth, while the comedy element is unusually abundant.

Boston Music Hall.—"The Pride of Jennico," the best of the romantic melodramas since "The Prisoner of Zenda," will be given at the Boston Music Hall next week by a strong company headed by the well-known actor, Edward K. Mawson, as the star.

Mr. Mawson, in the character of Basil Jennico, is credited with making a great success in the part. He is a fine looking virile actor, and is best known through several seasons spent as a star in his brother's play, "A Fair Rebel," and as Rudolph Kasendyll in "The Prisoner of Zenda."

The story deals with the adventures of a young Englishman, Basil Jennico, who has been made the heir of his great-uncle who, dying, has imposed the condition that he marry a woman as well born as himself.

A Large Order

Probably the largest order ever given for paint in the State of North Carolina, was received by the Odell Hardware Co., of Greensboro, N. C., from W. A. Irwin, Esq., of Durham.

The order was for 5,000 gallons of Devco lead-and-zinc paint, to be used on the large Irwin Mills and their cottages now being built in Hartnett County.

Many of the leading manufacturers were eager to secure this order, and it speaks volumes that the preference was given to Devco lead-and-zinc, which is undoubtedly the foremost paint in this country today.—Greensboro (N. C.) Record.

$1000 IN CASH PRIZES

TO BE OFFERED BY THE BOSTON HERALD NEXT SUNDAY.

A paper like The Boston Herald never does things by halves. When it offers a thousand dollars in cash prizes, it means to distribute one thousand dollars. The details will not be made public until next Sunday. Such an offer should excite enough interest to put a Sunday Boston Herald in every home in this town, and we shall be very much surprised at any other result.

An Exaggerated Report.

The family doctor had been summoned hastily, and he climbed the tenement stairs with a grave face. A woman was awaiting him in the doorway of a flat.

"I understand little Tommy has swallowed a quarter," he said. "Where is he?"

"Oh, doctor, I'm glad to tell you we've made a mistake," she said blithely. "It wasn't a quarter after all. It was only a nickel."—New York Press.

Boy Soldiers in South America.

In Venezuela, Colombia and other South American countries it is no uncommon thing to see boys of ten or twelve years of age or even younger carrying rifles and marching to battle with the armies which fight in the civil wars of those lands. These boy soldiers are usually of Indian blood, and they fight quite as well as the oldest veterans.

"ON THE STREET"

By "the Street" is usually meant the financial centre of a great city.

The men who do business there are among the best-dressed men in the world.

What "the Street" says is as final in matters of attire as in matters of finance.

We clothe a great many of these men and have done so for years.

We ask you to consider this fact when next you buy clothing.
